British Enlist All Arms for Test of Might At Singapore

Show of Strength to Be Held at Formidable Base Next Month.

Admiralty Denies Warning to Japan

The Sino-Japanese War.

Great Britain revealed plans for a gigantic display of land, sea and air might, coincident with dedication of her naval base at Singapore, and announced the United States would be the only foreign power to participate in the demonstration.

British Power in Asia.

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 14.—The government today announced combined maneuvers of the reinforced navy, army and air force would be held early next month at Singapore, the British Empire's formidable naval base in the war-troubled Far East.

It was believed the exercises would be the largest of Great Britain's in the Far East for many years. Observers immediately connected the announcement with the Chinese-Japanese war and the possible threat to British Hongkong.

U. S. Sole Power Asked.

The maneuvers will precede the opening of Singapore's new naval base February 14, when three United States light cruisers (the Trenton, Milwaukee and Memphis) will attend.

[Admiralty officials disclosed that United States warships would be the only foreign vessels to participate in inauguration of the $150,000,000 Singapore base, but denied any joint warning to Japan was intended, the United Press reported.

[The officials made no effort to explain the absence of French and Dutch warships, which previously had been expected to join the "sea parade" off the new fortifications at the tip of the Malay peninsula.

[The United States will send three of the four cruisers now en route to Australia to participate in the sesquicentennial of the founding of the Australian government.

[At Singapore they will join 25 British war vessels for the inauguration of the base, which dwarfs Gibraltar and even surpasses Pearl Harbor in the extensiveness of its defense works.—Editor's note.]

British men o' war from the East Indies and China squadrons and the Royal Indian navy will join in the exercises, while troops of the Singapore garrison will be reinforced by Punjab and Malay regiments. The royal air force squadrons will be supplemented by "some units" from India and Iraq.

The Singapore base commands a narrow passage between the Indian Ocean and the Pacific.

U. S. Orders Sam Beard Returned to Atlanta

Dr. Nolan Successful in Fight to Have Ex-Czar of Gambling Returned From Lorton; Warring, Two Aides at Local Prison.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Sam Beard, erstwhile czar of Washington rackets, will be sent back to the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., under orders from Attorney General Homer Cummings, it was announced last night.

It was learned further that the recent transfer of 13 prisoners from Atlanta to the Lorton Reformatory here included—beside Beard—Charles ("Rags") Warring and two of his gun-toting henchmen.

Warring and his lieutenants—Joseph S. Barnes, alias Bond, and Sam S. Montgomery—are serving from 18 months to two years in connection with a gang-war outbreak and shooting here in 1936. They are occupying the same cell block with Beard at Lorton, it was reported last night.

The fight to have Beard returned to Atlanta was launched by the Criminal Justice Association through Dr. James A. Nolan, executive director, as soon as Beard's transfer to Lorton became known.

The association's action was followed by protests from Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Dr. Nolan appealed directly to Ray L. Huff, general superintendent of District penal institutions.

Beard's return to Atlanta or some other Federal prison was ordered by the Attorney General as the result of a written request from Huff. He and Department of Justice officials conferred for several hours yesterday before the re-tranfer was decided upon.

Planes Wreck Loyalist Train, Rebels Report

Reinforcements Bombed in Sky Raid; Plan Direct Attack on Madrid.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France, at the Spanish Frontier, Jan. 14.—Insurgent bombing planes today were reported to have destroyed an entire train bringing up government reinforcements to the Teruel front in eastern Spain.

Insurgent dispatches said the government was moving new troops into the hotly contested sector in anticipation of a new insurgent offensive.

There also were reports of a plan for a direct assault on Madrid.

500 Feared Dead in Blast.

London, Jan. 14 (AP).—Six British Laborite members of Parliament, returning from government Spain, confirmed reports today of a "terrible explosion" in which from 500 to 600 persons were said to have died in Madrid.

They said the blast apparently was in a munitions dump in a subway station. They said they understood the cache had blown up, wreckign the station. The catastrophe considerably perturbed" the Spanish government, they said.

1 Killed, 1 Hurt As Motorcycle Crashes Auto

Victim Is Sixth Fatality of Year; Freed Autoist Is Held in 2d Death.

Washington registered its sixth traffic fatality of the year late last night a few hours after Arthur G. Boan, exonerated by police court of guilt in a traffic death last May, was ordered held by a coroner's jury in connection with the death of a man injured in a Christmas Eve accident.

The latest victim was a young motorcyclist, killed when his machine crashed into an automobile at Branch and Pennsylvania avenues southeast. His companion was seriously injured.

The dead man is Gerral A. Norman, 22, of 415 New Jersey avenue southeast. Seriously injured in Providence Hospital, suffering from internal injuries and a fractured skull, is James M. Stone, 23, of 1708 Lawrence street northeast, who was riding on the seat behind Norman. The operator of the car involved in the crash was George R. Willis, 33, of 100 N street southwest. He was treated at Casualty Hospital for minor injuries.

Boan was held in connection with

Childs Restaurant Held Up as Guests Dine Unsuspecting

While 30 unsuspecting guests bent over late dinners, Childs restaurant at 1340 New York avenue northwest was held up and robbed of $35 to $45 last night by an unmasked bandit.

William Grigg, 22, of 2623 Garfield street northwest, told the police the man entered the restaurant and thrust a bulging overcoat pocket in his direction.

"Don't make a move," the bandit said. "Give me all your money; don't give me any change."

Bandit Shot, D.C. Police Arrest Two

Woods Combed by Posses After 2 Stores Here Are Robbed.

Two men, believed to be members of a Baltimore bandit gang which has terrorized the District for weeks, were captured, and a third was shot last night after a running gunfight which ended in a crash at the Peace Cross in Bladensburg.

The captives gave their names as Harry Towson, 25, and Andrew Savage, 25, both colored, of Baltimore. Detective Sergt. Robert Barrett, who, with Precinct Detective Dewey Guest, made the capture, said he shot a third member of the gang who fled from the wreck. Five men were in the automobile.

Confess to 40 Holdups.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, said the pair in custody confessed to 40 holdups here and elsewhere.

Late last night policemen, firemen and armed posses scoured the woods near Bladensburg for the wounded man and his two companions.

Barrett and Guest said they spotted the bandit car at Fifteenth street and Tennessee avenue northeast after its description had been broadcast following two liquor store holdups in quick succession. They pursued it at terrific speed out Bladensburg road, but withheld their fire until they reached Colmar Manor, Md. From there to the Peace Cross they fired several shots into the rear window of the racing car.

When the machine reached the Peace Cross, Towson who, police said, was driving, attempted to turn into Defense highway. Unable to make the turn, the car crashed into another occupied by an unidentified colored man and his wife. The woman was cut on the head.

Detectives said the gang was the one which has made repeated forays on District liquor and grocery stores. They were said to be the bandits who walked into an ambush in a liquor store shortly before Christmas and escaped under cover of a smoke screen at Dupont Circle, causing a private automobile and a taxicab to collide.

Two Stores Held Up.

Last night they held up the Smith Liquor Store, 609 Eleventh street southwest, taking $45 from Edward P. Smith, proprietor, at gunpoint. A few minutes later they held up a liquor store in the 600 block I street southeast, taking $50 from Morris Hein.

Samuel E. Saxe, 69-year-old watchman on a construction job at Third and R streets northeast, was held up at pistol point and robbed of $5 last night by three colored bandits. The men bound Saxe with wire and left him in a tool shed.

Blum Rallies Socialists to Stop Bonnet

Left Wing Plans to Deny Support to Former Envoy in U. S.

Premier Designate Favors Balanced French Budget.

By the United Press.

Paris (Saturday), Jan. 15.—The national council of the Socialist Party, nucleus of France's battered People's Front, today called for nation-wide demonstrations against Georges Bonnet, who is attempting to form a new government and solve a grave financial crisis.

Bonnet, until seven months ago French Ambassador to the United States, last night accepted the task of seeking a new government after three former premiers rejected invitations from President Albert Lebrun.

The Socialists, led by Vice Premier Leon Blum, who established People's Front in power, met shortly before midnight and demanded leadership of the new government.

It was the Socialists, most powerful division in the Chamber of Deputies, who brought about the downfall of Premier Camille Chautemps at dawn yesterday after Chautemps defied his Socialist and Communist supporters.

Bonnet, a veteran financial expert, insisted last night upon unrestricted currency and a balanced budget. He blamed the Communists for the nation's wave of labor disorders.

Turns to Centrists.

Because the Socialists and Communists want currency control to stem the plunge of the franc, it was indicated that he would seek support from the Centrists, in his search for a "salvation" government. His own party, the Radical-Socialists, pledged support.

Trading in the franc was officially suspended. It was necessary that the cabinet crisis be solved over the week-end to halt the plunge of the franc, stop the flight of capital abroad, replenish the treasury and deal with the labor situation.

Despite the situation the franc showed surprising strength in world markets and lost but little in unofficial French trading.

The franc closed here at 29.93 to the dollar from an unofficial opening of 29.54.

Balanced Budget Aim.

President Lebrun, who has faced 12 such crises in his less than six years in Elysee Palace, persuaded Bonnet to seek a cabinet after Chautemps, Minister of War Edouard Daladier and Minister without portfolio Albert Sarraut, all Radical-Socialists and all former premiers, declined to try.

Bonnet promised to report on his effort before noon today. Basing his efforts on a policy of a balanced budget and uncontrolled currency, he began consultations immediately with Chautemps and Edouard Herriot, president of the Chamber of Deputies and former premier.

Bonnet became Ambassador to the United States in February, 1937, succeeding Andre de Laboulaye, but remained in Washington only four months.

All Holding Companies Must Go—Roosevelt; 63 Tax Reforms Urged

Lightening of Undivided Profits Levies Asked in House Report.

Provisions Eased On Capital Gains

Small Firms Relieved; 'Family' Corporations Are Penalized.

(Text on Page 7.)

By Robert C. Albright.

Complex changes in the whole business tax structure, modifying undivided profits taxes on all except "closely held" corporations and "smoothing out" sharp steps in the capital gains levy, yesterday were reported to the House Ways and Means committee.

Designed to yield the same revenue as the present tax system, 63 specific changes in the revenue laws were recommended by the special tax sub-committee headed by Representative Fred M. Vinson (Democrat), of Kentucky.

Vinson claimed for his plan "no loss of revenue, but on the other hand, that business activities will be increased with a resulting gain to the Government in the long run."

Hearings Open Today.

Hearings on the 91-page report, two months in preparation, will open before the Ways and Means Committee today, with Treasury officials on the witness stand. Hearings will be held on the report, as no bill has been prepared. Leaders hope to get it to the House floor before February, and forecast final enactment of a tax bill by mid-March.

Formulation of the report followed a Nation-wide clamor for modification and even repeal of the undivided profits and capital gains levy, largely blamed by business interests for the sharp recent recession.

The subcommittee favored repeal of neither tax. The modified principle of the undivided profits levy was retained on corporations earning more than $25,000 annually. This group represents 90 per cent of the corporate income of the country, but only 10 per cent of the corporations.

Flat Rate on Small Firms.

Corporations with net incomes of $25,000 or less (90 per cent of the corporations but earning 10 per cent of the income), would be entirely relieved of the undivided profits tax and taxed at flat rates graduated in proportion to earnings.

Stiffly higher taxation is provided for about 1,000 "closely held" corporations, controlled by families or limited stockholders, which earn more than $50,000 and distribute less than 60 per cent. This penalty levy is aimed at accumulation of corporate surpluses for alleged "tax avoidance."

Sweeping change in capital gains tax computation was recommended, providing a more gradual step-down of the percentage of gain or loss to be taken into account for tax purposes, elimination of the highest surtax brackets on individual capital gains, and more liberal deductions of capital losses in the interest of greater equity.

"It is the opinion of your subcommittee that there will be a very

See TAX, Page 4, Column 5.

Proposed Changes In Business Taxes

Business tax changes proposed in yesterday's Ways and Means subcommittee revenue report would:

Retain the principle of the undivided profits tax in modified form on 10 per cent of the Nation's corporations, earning more than $25,000 annually.

Exempt from any undivided profits levy 90 per cent of the corporations, all in the less-than-$25,000 class, and substitute more moderate graduated normal rates.

Give intermediate "transition" treatment to companies earning just over the $25,000 mark.

Provide virtually no relief for so-called "closely held" corporations, controlled by ten people or less, charged with use for tax-avoidance purposes.

Smooth out sharpness of present capital gains tax, with the minimum 40 per cent tax reached on assets held for 5 years instead of 10.

Give more liberal deductions for capital losses.

Eliminate a present requirement that capital gains of wealthy individuals be forced into highest surtax brackets, with an alternative flat tax provided.

Aldrich Urges Round Table to Stop Recession

'Goodwill' Conference of Business and New Deal Proposed by Banker.

The business recession "would end instantly" if Government and business would meet "with sincerity and good will" to study the tremendous problems, one of the Nation's most influential bankers told a Senate committee yesterday.

Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank of New York, testifying before the Senate Unemployment Committee, which is seeking recession causes and cures, approved the "round-table method" of battling depression.

He scouted the idea that business is "on strike" against the Administration by stating that "I tell you, in all seriousness, every business man and banker I know, as patriotic citizens, appreciates the seriousness of the depression and wants to co-operate with his Government and his country in stopping it."

Concerned Over Budget.

He said the belief business would not co-operate was "inconceivable" to him, and added: "Why, we all must co-operate with the Government. We can't do anything else."

The dark-haired, sandy-mustached banker, folding his hands precisely on the witness-table, and crossing his high-laced brown shoes neatly under the table, said that "the thing which concerns me most is and has been the continually unbalanced budget."

He asked for a balanced budget, although he admitted its immediate balance was improbable as long as the necessity for vast relief and

'Bombshell' Rocks Wall Street Circles

40 of Biggest Concerns In Country Would Be Affected.

By Franklyn Waltman.

President Roosevelt yesterday dropped one of his most surprising bombshells on the business world when he called for the abolition of holding companies in all lines of industry and finance. He did not specify how he would accomplish this end but asserted it was his objective.

Although the President particularly singled out utility holding companies and corporations owning bank stock—of which there are some 40 or more in the country—his declaration that holding companies should be abolished included all types. Why have any holding companies?, the President asked.

Drastic taxation of inter-corporation dividends or enactment of a Federal incorporation or licensing law, such as that proposed by Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney and William E. Borah, could be used as instruments to impose a death sentence on all holding companies, it was suggested on Capitol Hill.

Measure Being Studied.

Incidentally, it was learned last night that measures for either abolishing or subjecting to stricter regulation bank holding companies have been quietly under study for several weeks by an interdepartmental committee comprising Treasury, Federal Reserve, R. F. C. and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation representatives. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau criticized the banking holding companies in a recent appearance before the Appropriations Committee.

Had the President confined his remarks to the utility and banking holding companies they would not have caused widespread surprise. His contention that he would never abandon the law placing a death sentence on utility holding companies was interesting, but not sensational. As for the banking holding companies, efforts to restrict or to abolish them have been under serious consideration from time to time since 1931. But Mr. Roosevelt's all-sweeping declaration aimed at all holding companies caused the press conference to gasp.

"Harmony" Parley Held.

An hour later the President held another of his series of harmony meetings with business groups, sitting down this time with two industrialists, a Wall Street banker, two labor leaders and former New Deal counselor to discuss greater co-operation between capital, labor, business and Government to curb economic recessions.

The group included Thomas W. Lamont, partner in J. P. Morgan & Co.; Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of directors of General Electric Corporation; Charles W. Taussig, president of the American

Mae West 'Adam and Eve' Skit Draws Rebuke Upon N.B.C. From U. S. Radio Commission

The National Broadcasting Co. yesterday was reprimanted by the Federal Communications Commission for permitting the radio skit "Adam and Eve," featuring Mae West, Don Ameche and Charlie McCarthy, the Nation's No. 1 Dummy, to go on the air the night of Sunday, December 12.

Chairman Frank R. McNinch commended the radio company for having apologized over the radio and through the press, and in a letter to the Commission.

All of the 59 stations throughout the country which relayed the broadcast likewise were held guilty by the Commission, McNinch asserted.

"We are unable to accept the view expressed in your letter that the broadcasting of these features was only 'a human error in judgment,'" stated McNinch, in writing Lenox R. Lohr, president of N. B. C.

"The care which the public has a right to expect, and which is, we understand, the practice, in the writing and editing of the manuscripts and in rehearsing of such features would seem to exclude the element of accident and surprise."

McNinch held that the "admittedly objectionable character of these features is attributable to the lack of proper conception for a broadcast program intended for reception in the homes, schools, automobiles, religious, social and economic institutions, as well as the clubs, hotels and other places, reaching a much larger number of people daily than any other means of communication."

He added that a clear recognition of the social, civic and moral responsibility of the radio required a high standard for programs that would insure against features that are "suggestive, vulgar, immoral or of such character as may be offensive to the great mass of right-thinking, clean-minded Americans."

"Each licensee carries his own definite responsibility," McNinch held.

"In view of your own recognition of the objectionable character of the program in question and of your assurance that greater care and caution will be used in the future," Mr. McNinch wrote Lohr, "the commission has decided that no further action at this time than writing of this letter in condemnation of the program will be taken.

"However, upon application for the renewal of the licenses of the stations carrying this broadcast, the commission will take under consideration this incident, along with all other evidence, to show whether or not a particular licensee has conducted his station in the public interest."

Senators Ponder Ickes' Baths As Anti-Lynching Bill Waits

By Sidney Olson.

Whether any Freudian significance attaches to Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes' bathing yesterday became the highlight of the Senate debate on the anti-lynching bill before that body became mired down in an almost hopeless mess of parliamentary rules over the controversial measure.

The bathing habits of Secretary Ickes were drawn into the Southern filibuster when Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina, attacked as "garbage" a book by Ferdinand Lundberg, titled "America's Sixty Families," from which Ickes quoted in an antimonopoly address.

In the book Lundberg traced the fondness of "the upper classes" for bathing to a Freudian theory that frequent washing of the hands is a betrayal of a subconscious feeling of guilt, and that therefore bathing, according to Lundberg, "marks a betrayal of an even deeper feeling than subconscious guilt."

Bailey drawled acidly: "So if you wash, you are guilty. If you get in the bathtub you are condemned. That is a new doctrine in America, but I am ready for anything now.

"I advise the Senators hereafter, if they are going to bathe, to keep it very quiet." At this point another antilynching filibusterer, Senator Ellison D. Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, arose. Bailey shouted:

"Before I permit the Senator to interrupt me, I should like to ask him whether he has bathed lately. If he has, I do not want to deal with him."

As the galleries roared, Smith said: "But the Senator warned us not to make it public. Does the Senator want me to betray my guilt right here?" He then asked Bailey "what significance" should be attached to the new Interior Depart-

Chiang's Army Takes Tsining In Fierce Drive

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Saturday), Jan. 15.—Japanese announced today their forces in Shantung Province had driven through Tsining southward toward the strategic Lunghai Railway and had occupied Tangchiakuo.

They said the Chinese 29th Army which had defended Tsining was retreating toward Kinsan, 27 miles to the south.

Chinese press dispatches conceded the Japanese were in possession of Tsining which was reported deserted by civilians and virtually destroyed by gunfire.

Earlier, a reinforced Chinese army, fighting savagely to stave off Japanese conquest of the nation's bread basket, was reported to have recaptured Tsining.

The tide of battle in the great agricultural region of central China apparently still was in the balance as the Japanese claimed slow but steady advances toward the vital Lunghai Railway, despite determined resistance of a Chinese army estimated at 400,000.

The Chinese have been recruiting new troops in the central provinces at a hectic pace and were reported to have enrolled 750,000 in the past six weeks. These men, with only the scantiest training, are being put into action against the 100,000 trained Japanese troops in southern Shantung and northern Kiangsu provinces.

(At Tokyo the German Ambassador, who recently was reported to have transmitted peace proposals to China, conferred with Foreign Minister Koki Hirota. Domei (Japanese news agency) said "important matters" were discussed.)

In the far northwest, reports through Chinese channels said 40,000 Outer Mongolian troops had moved into position along the border of Suiyuan Province, which fell to the Japanese early in the war.

These troops, considered under Russian influence, were said to be establishing a line to prevent Japan from cutting communications between China and Outer Mongolia, the route for any support from Russia.

Two of the best known military figures in China were reported relieved of their commands. Feng Yu-Hsiang, China's picturesque "Christian general," was said to have been replaced by Gen. Chen Chien, vice minister of war, as commander of the Peiping-Hankow Railroad zone.

U. S. Protests to Japan.

By the Associated Press.

The United States has protested to Japan once more against violation of American property rights in China.

The State Department announced yesterday that Consul John M. Allison at Nanking had notified the Japanese embassy in Nanking that Japanese soldiers continued to enter American property there and remove goods and employes of American institutions, despite a previous American protest.

Allison cabled the soldiers did this without giving notice of, or reasons for, their action.

Allison, who was consul at Tsinan and went to Nanking to take charge of the embassy after the Japanese occupied China's capital, cabled last week that there had been considerable looting of American property. The Chinese servant of the third secretary, Douglas Jenkins, was killed, he said.

The employes of American institutions mentioned in Allison's dispatch today were believed to be Chinese. The American property referred to lies outside the embassy compound.

Roosevelt's Outburst Against Holding Companies Explains Business' Fear.

By Franklyn Waltman

On last Tuesday my distinguished colleague, Raymond Clapper, of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, wrote a column which won enthusiastic White House indorsement the following day. Indeed, his column was pointed out to those who came seeking clews as to President Roosevelt's purpose in having conferences with the leaders of big business.

WALTMAN

"One of the mysteries of current American politics," said Mr. Clapper in that column, "is the fear which so many business men have of Roosevelt. This is more than a lack of confidence in his policies. It is a vague but real fear of Roosevelt himself, fear that he is about to do something to them."

Mr. Clapper regarded this "fear of Roosevelt" on the part of business as a mystery because he saw no reason for the fear, asserting that "the business community never has tumbled to the fact that Roosevelt is a mild man, that his bark is worse than his bite." Mr. Clapper concluded by projecting the idea that when Mr. Roosevelt commences shooting those who oppose him, as in Russia, American businessmen would have something to worry about. The White House apparently also is mystified by this "fear of Roosevelt" for it indorsed the Clapper observations.

After yesterday's press conference with the President neither Mr. Clapper nor anyone else should be mystified by business' "fear of Roosevelt." Like a crack of thunder in the summer, Mr. Roosevelt in that conference proposed the abolition of all holding companies in all types of business in this country. Though he singled out banking holding companies for particular comment, he made no exceptions nor did he outline any qualifications. Why have any holding companies? asked the President. And that was that.

The implications of what Mr. Roosevelt so blithely proposed staggered his press conference. It caused Wall Street to blink with amazement, the Associated Press reported. It caused Senator Alva Adams to assert that what Mr. Roosevelt proposed, if carried out immediately, would result in "economic anarchy."

Throughout the day those who attended the press conference speculated as to whether Mr. Roosevelt really meant what he had said, or whether he was merely expressing an opinion which he has no intention of pursuing. He sometimes does, oblivious still of the fact that the opinions of the President necessarily must be regarded as policies of the Federal Government.

The President declined to reveal how he would eliminate all holding companies from the American economic structure—nor did he specify what he meant by a "holding company." In ordinary parlance a "holding company" is any corporation holding the stock of another corporation. At least one-half of the corporations in the country hold stock of other corporations. Indeed hundreds of corporations hold the controlling stock in other corporations—their subsidiaries.

Thus it is no wonder the President's words sent a shock through the business community. Did Mr. Roosevelt mean that those companies which own subsidiaries because some State laws require corporations doing business within their boundaries to incorporate in those States for the purpose of regulation must divorce themselves from such holdings and reorganize?

Did he mean that a corporation which owns a company supplying it with raw materials or essential parts must divorce itself from such holdings and reorganize? Did he mean that the gigantic American Telephone & Telegraph Co. must divest itself of its holdings in all the local telephones in the nation and thus decentralize control of that necessarily Nation-wide enterprise?

Did he mean that the General Motors Corp., which has $200,000,000 invested in subsidiaries and affiliates, must divest itself of those holdings? Did he mean that the Pennsylvania railroad must give up those parts of its system which it cannot own directly? Did he really mean that several hundred of the largest corporations in the country must reorganize?

Who knows what Mr. Roosevelt meant? He was all inclusive in his statement, yet even a novice recognizes that what he proposes is impossible of enactment at least within the next few years. Nevertheless Mr. Roosevelt, whether he talked loosely or with determination projected into the present business situation as disturbing an uncertainty as could be imagined. It is no wonder that capital has gone on strike—it is no wonder that in the view of the threats implied in the President's words small investors prefer to keep their money idle in banks and that industrialists fear to risk future plans.

It is because President Roosevelt constantly engages in the sort of reckless talking which came from him yesterday, Mr. Clapper, that there is a "fear of Roosevelt." It is not so much what he does, but the way he does it that creates fear and a lack of confidence, Mr. Clapper.

Recognized evils have flowed from the holding company device, especially in the banking field. Such evils should be corrected. But the way to do it is in an orderly, specific and exact manner—not by decreeing the death of all holding companies between puffs on a cigaret and with a nonchalance more appropriate to musing on the state of the weather than the discussion of matters of vital importance to industry.

The reason the business world has an inherent fear of Mr. Roosevelt is the fact that he has no concrete, definite policy or program. If business knew exactly what he proposed to do to it, it could adjust itself to his plans, whether they were liked or not. After all, businessmen primarily are interested in making their business a success and they do so in Germany and Italy, as well as in democratic countries.

But they must have some assurance against constant oscillations and circlings. You cannot properly run a business if you are apprehensive over every press conference the President holds or every speech some subordinate in the Administration makes. Yet such things have their impact on business, day in and day out. Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt does not always bite after barking, as Mr. Clapper termed it, but the barking is very disconcerting and one is never sure whether the bite will follow the bark.

* * *

If Mr. Roosevelt sincerely wishes to help the present situation he could do nothing better than to outline in details a concrete, specific program of action—and as the Chief Executive of the Nation that is his responsibility—which could be projected for an acid test examination. Let him propose the reform he wishes and let Congress take the responsibility for acting on them—and once the program is set, for Heaven's sake, give the country a breathing spell from disruptive proposals.

Premier's Foes Patch Up Row

Opposition Masses Against Goga's Anti-Semitic Youth Regime.

By the Associated Press.

Bucharest, Jan. 14.—Consolidation of opposition against Premier Octavian Goga was reported to have gone a step further today after former Premier Alexander Vaida-Voevod had a two-hour audience with King Carol.

It was stated authoritatively that Vaida-Voevod—ousted from the National Peasant Party because the party leader, Juliu Maniu, would not tolerate this anti-Semitic policies—told the King he was ready to make peace with Maniu and reenter the party.

This development came after Maniu, also a former premier, was reported to have made possible the first move toward patching up his quarrel with King Carol over the monarch's friendship for Mme. Magda Lupescu. Vaida-Voevod and Maniu were expected to meet Sunday to discuss the situation.

Maniu, who resigned in 1933 because of his argument with Carol, conferred with Gen. Ernst Baliff, who is close to the King. He was given to understand that Carol was ready to be friends on condition there be no interference in his private affairs.

The prospective reconciliation was viewed as the possible development of an effective opposition to the new Nationalist, anti-Semitic regime of Goga, 57-year-old professor and poet.

While members of Goga's youth movement paraded in many Rumanian cities, booing Jews, the official gazette published an order forbidding Christian maids under 40 years of age to work in Jewish households and another requiring dismissal by June 1 of all foreign sports teachers regardless of their race.

Hungary Guards Border.

Budapest, Jan. 14 (AP).—Regulations excluding fugitive Rumanians from Hungary were announced at a cabinet session today by Minister of the Interior Joseph Szell. Frontier guards were instructed to be on the alert to prevent entry of persons fleeing because of Rumania's anti-Semitic course.

Aldrich Urges Round Table to Stop Recession

Jobs

This lack he traced directly to "fear of Government competition with private business, particularly in the electric utilities," and to various measures which he described as "tending to bring about general lack of confidence in the investing public." Among these he listed high income taxes, the capital gains tax "in its present form," and "above all," the undistributed surplus profits tax.

"These were all things which tended to slow down the capital markets of the country," he said.

An earlier witness, J. D. A. Morrow, president of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., had stressed "uncertainty of the future" as the prime element in the lack of confidence in the business community. Asked by Chairman James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Sarolina, if business "had ever been certain of its outlook in the past," he answered grimly:

"No, we may never have been certain, but neither were we ever afraid the way we are now."

Recession a Surprise.

Aldrich, speaking extemporaneously, after declaring that the recession had been "a very great surprise" to most business men and bankers, remarked: "Almost everybody was surprised and incredulous, as there was nothing in the business situation to indicate any justification for a recession."

He insisted the Government policies which he named—taxes, fear of Government competition induced by "inflammatory speeches" and the unbalanced budget with deficit financing—contributed "heavily" to the recession, but that many other factors also contributed.

He expressed himself as "thoroughly in accord" with many New Deal laws of the past few years, but asked that long-term investors be reassured by allowing them to feel that the "program of reform" instituted by the Securities and Exchange Commission had "reached most of its objectives."

Urges Free Market.

Of the markets, he said, "I think the thing that has disturbed me most, although perhaps unduly, has been the feeling that the Administration did not believe it necessary to have a broad, liquid market. My own belief is that the market should be as broad and just as free as it possibly can be."

He described the utilities as "bursting to go ahead" if they could be assured against the fear of Government competition, and speaking generally, asserted: "I see no reasons for business not to go ahead. There is a certain lack of balance in our economy, but if Government would maintain a consistency of policy toward industry, the lack of confidence would vanish."

When Chairman Byrnes expressed his own lack of optimism over the chances of immediate budget-balancing, Aldrich agreed that both relief and national defense must be provided for first.

Says Slump Began Here.

Morrow, intensely critical of most New Deal measures, insisted that "In our view this depression was created here in Washington. It will have to be cured here. There must be affirmative executive and legislative action to dispel the doubt, the apprehension and distrust that have frozen the potential purchases of millions of people in this country."

He said his company had spent $3,500,000 for capital improvements in the past two years but dared not spend "another single cent" until it can foresee the trend of business legislation here.

Two other witnesses, F. G. Tryon, of the market statistics unit, National Bituminous Coal Commission, and the Rev. John O'Grady, secretary, National Conference of Catholic Charities and director of the Social Work School of Catholic University here, also contributed to the accumulating pile of testimony before the committee.

Father O'Grady, intimately familiar with work-relief programs throughout the country, amazed the Senators by his accurate on-the-ground knowledge of relief conditions in cities in their own States. He urged expansion and extension of the present Works Progress Administration, and declared that any moves to turn relief over to the States were in truth attacks on the program itself.

Kellogg Differs With Roosevelt

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—C. W. Kellogg, president of the Edison Electric Institute, tonight branded inaccurate the statement of President Roosevelt that utility holding companies were "a 4-inch tail wagging a 96-inch dog."

According to Kellogg, 33 inches is a more proper length for the holding company "tail," in proportion to the part of the industry it dominates. Kellogg said holding companies had been a vast aid in raising capital needed for expansion of utility operating companies.

Senate Ponders Ickes' Baths As Anti-Lynching Bill Waits

Lynch

ment Building, which, he said, is "honeycombed" with bathtubs.

Bailey said without hesitation: "Very clearly, they are all guilty . . . I would not care to impeach the Secretary of the Interior with the suggestion that he bathes; but I read in the newspaper that when his office was built, he required in addition to all the palatial accoutrements, that he should have a private bath, and it should be in blue marble and finished in gold.

"I have heard men who were admitted to those sacred precincts say that Mr. Gibbon's descriptions of the luxuries of Caligula and Nero faded into insignificance in the presence of that great reality—but I am not saying that Mr. Ickes ever bathes. I would not do that. I would not strike below the belt . . . As for his getting in a bathtub and listening to a radio, I would not say that. I would not go that far with a renegade Republican who has become a sort of halfway Democrat."

Bailey declared he had "sufficiently warned my fellow Senators on this business of bathing under the New Deal," and added in an ominous tone: "Above all, do not bathe. If you bathe, you are guilty." After asserting that probably would ruin the soap and plumbing industry, and would hurt a "great soap man who was a large contributor to our party," Bailey said that probably "we can get contributions from the folks who do not wash and then we will be all right."

Denounces Book.

He then denounced the book in unmeasured terms and added: "When a man deliberately chooses to create garbage and sell it for money he has gone a little bit lower than the stuff in the sewer itself. . . . A man who lies for money is the lowest form of liar."

At this point he hurled the book, from which he had read, to the floor. Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma picked the book up to place it on his desk, but Senator Smith snatched it and threw it to the floor again. Senator Thomas picked it up once more and placed it in his wastebasket, whence Senator Sherman Minton (Democrat), Indiana, one of the aggressive younger New Dealers, rescued it. Minton read the book at his desk for some time thereafter.

The parliamentary tangle began with the difficulty of getting and holding a quorum. A quorum call involving a long roll call, is a favorite filibuster device. It has been invoked 38 times during the present filibuster, counting the eight quorum calls yesterday. This does not take into account the numerous roll-call votes demanded on minor points by filibusterers, of which there were four yesterday.

The final roll call rested on this involved point, stated at its simplest:

The question was on a motion by Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley, Kentucky, to lay on the table a motion by Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), Tennessee, to discharge Sergeant at Arms Chesley M. Jurney from the necessity under previous order of forcibly rounding up enough Senators to constitute a quorum.

Goes After Senators.

First there had been a roll-call vote on the order to send the dapper Jurney out to drive in the absentee Senators. The proponents won, and Jurney went out on his mission. Each time he went out thereafter on quorum calls, he rounded up the necessary 49 Senators, one more than a majority, which constitutes a quorum. But when McKellar demanded a vote on his motion to discharge Jurney from that duty, the total vote on Barkley's motion to table McKellar's motion was 33 to 13.

The vote was challenged as insufficient, since obviously a quorum had not voted. Another roll call was demanded, a quorum obtained and the vote ordered again. This time the vote totaled 35 to 11, still insufficient. Another roll call was demanded, a quorum obtained and the third roll-call vote on this motion ordered. Absentee Senators, who answered their names on the qorum call, but then immediately drifted out of the chamber while the vote was on, forced the situation to continue until Barkley, obviously angered, lectured the Senate vigorously, insisting he wuold keep the session going "all night if necessary" in order to force attendance. The final vote showed 35 to 11 against, with 3 other Senators merely voting "present." Then Barkley made the motion to recess until noon today, and the Senate adjourned, its monumental labors over for the day.

House Committee In 'Rebellion' Over Item Veto Clause

Angry members of the House Appropriations Committee joined yesterday in "post-mortem" rebellion against legislation giving President Roosevelt power to veto individual items in an appropriation bill.

The committee wants the Senate to nullify the "item veto" power, which was added to the independent offices appropriation bill.

You Can Have Everything You Want on a Holiday and It Won't Cost You Any More Than a "Half-baked" Vacation!

What you pay for hotel accommodations isn't the criterion of a winter vacation budget. It's what you get for your money. Frequently vacationists, with a false notion of economy, will firmly put aside the desire to stay at the best hotel, where they want to be guests, and look around for one with so-called "moderate" or "low" rates. They do not know or consider that THE BEST COSTS LESS in certain instances, that they could indulge the luxuries of the best hotel living and actually save money on their vacation expenses.

Sounds paradoxical, doesn't it? Yet we can prove it. We have the facts and figures—authentic data on vacation costs acquired in an accurate survey of the greatest winter resort area in the United States, namely, Miami and Miami Beach. Our vacation specialists can show you how you can save from 36 to 43 cents of your recreational dollar, while enjoying The Most Amazing Vacation Ever Conceived.

Perhaps you have the erroneous notion that only millionaires can afford to stay at the best hotels in this playground. Two of America's finest resort hotels, with vast estates, are located here—the Roney Plaza, Miami Beach, and the Miami Biltmore, Miami (Coral Gables). Do you know that many of the "millionaires" who favor these hotels do not spend more on their normal, routine vacation pleasures than the average vacationist who goes to a lower-priced hotel and doesn't have the benefits of the economies, privileges and facilities which the Roney Plaza and the Miami Biltmore include in their unique policy of guest entertainment, all for the one cost of room accommodations?

Just one economy enjoyed by Roney Plaza and Miami Biltmore guests is worth the difference in rates between the best and the low-priced hotels. That is the private transportation system, a fleet of big, comfortable aerocars (auto lounge cars) to take them to all points of interest in this resort area without charge! Think what you spend in taxi fares, sightseeing and other expenses just to go places in any metropolitan center. Here this expense is entirely eliminated—saving approximately one-third of your vacation costs! Plying on regular schedules, day and night, these aerocars take guests to the races, jai alai fronton, nightclubs, shopping centers, theaters, airports, even down on the Florida keys. That's just one of the extra advantages of staying at the Roney Plaza or the Miami Biltmore.

But people are waking up to this pleasant truth that THE BEST COSTS LESS. More and more "the average vacationist" is taking advantage of the opportunities for a COMPLETE VACATION offered by the Roney Plaza and the Miami Biltmore.

To tell you about this revolutionary plan of guest hospitality, as well as to give you valuable information about Florida and Florida vacations in general, we have established staffs of vacation specialists in both New York and Chicago. They will be pleased to call on you personally, if you are in or near either of these cities or in Boston, Philadelphia or Washington, and explain all the details of this policy, answer your questions, help you figure in advance what a Florida vacation will cost. If you live outside these metropolitan zones, they will be pleased to answer all your questions by letter, giving you all the information and facts you request. Certainly you do not obligate yourself in any way by asking us to call or write.

Forging Names On Relief Rolls Laid to Md. Man

5 Warrants Accuse Souder, Suspended Montgomery Official.

Five warrants alleging forgery were sworn out against Philip Roy Souder, suspended supervisor of county aid in Montgomery County, in Rockville, Md., last night.

The warrants were sworn out by Detective Sergeant Theodore F. Vollten before Justice of the Peace Charles M. Webb upon recommendation of States Attorney James H. Pugh.

Pugh recommended that a total of $5,000 bond be set, $1,000 for each of five charges of forging names on county relief checks.

Souder was at liberty last night under $500 bond as he had been since last September following indictment o ncharges of embezzlement of $31.25.

The checks on which charges of forgery was made and amounts, listed on the warrants, were: June 23, 1935, $15; February 16, 1937, $10; September 15, 1937, $15; May 11, 1937, $15, all made out in names of relief clients; and May 25, 1937, $25, a check to undertaker Herman Snyder, of Mt. Airy, Md.

States Attorney Pugh said last night:

"There are a number of other charges which are not being lodged against him at this time but will be presented to the grand jury."

Next regular session of the grand jury is scheduled for March 14, he said. The present jury will not be recalled.

Audit Being Pressed.

An audit, started in September after Souder's indictment, is being carried on by William L. Lampe, of the firm of Wooden & Benson, accountants.

Sergt. Vollten, Detective Sergt. James S. McAuliffe, and Policeman Ernest Thompson, have been conducting the investigation.

Souder, a former building supply dealer in Bethesda, Md., is son of the late Philip R. Souder, a former county commissioner, and brother of the late A. W. Souder, also a former commissioner.

He was appointed relief supervisor by the county commissioners in 1935 after victory of the Fusion Party at the polls. He succeeded Mrs. Willie Greene Day Perry, who recommended abolition of the office.

Souder handled only county relief funds. Federal and State relief funds were handled by the county welfare board.

55th Birthday to Be Observed By Civil Service Commission

Celebration to Be Started Tomorrow, With Mass Meeting of Government Employes and Their Friends Tuesday Night.

The Civil Service Commission tomorrow will begin the observance of its fifty-fifth anniversary. Washington, where the central offices are located, and the Nation at large, where thousands of men and women attend to Uncle Sam's expanding and teeming business, view the event significantly in the light of current agitation for extension of the merit system principle to the entire field of Federal employes and the possibilities in the reorganization proposals before Congress.

The observance of the commission's establishment 55 years ago will take a varied form in Washington. A mass meeting of Government employes and their friends will be held Tuesday at 7:30 p. m. at the Departmental Auditorium, Constitution avenue, between Twelfth and Fourteenth streets.

After a concert by the U. S. Marine Band Orchestra, there will be speeches by Senators Bulow and O'Mahoney, Representative Robert Ramspeck, the three civil service commissioners, national officers of the American Federation of Government Employes and others. After the meeting Commissioner Harry B. Mitchell will speak over a Columbia network at 10:45 p. m.

LaGuardia to Speak.

Of significance to the merit system fight being waged by various organizations, Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, will address a luncheon meeting sponsored by the National Civil Service Reform League Tuesday at 12:30 o'clock at the Willard Hotel. Robert L. Johnson, president, will preside.

On Monday at 10:30 p. m. Representative Ramspeck will discuss civil service problems on the National Forum network over station WMAL. A civil service dance will be held under A. F. G. E. auspices Wednesday night at the Raleigh hotel.

The commission is not without romance in its 55 years of growth. Exactly that many years ago tomorrow, President Chester A. Arthur signed a bill designed to remove spoils from the Federal service and place the service on an efficient basis. The bill was the Pendleton act, signed January 16, 1883, after passage by a reluctant Congress which bowed to an insistent popular demand brought to a head by the indignation following the assassination of President Gargeld by a disappointed spoils seeker.

Arthur played fair with the civil service act when he appointed three of the ablest civil service reform advocates to be the first commissioners. They were Dorman B. Eaton—who had devoted years of his life to popularizing the civil service idea; John M. Gregory, lawyer, educator and editor, and Leroy D. Thoman, youthful judge and editor.

The commissioners took the oath of office March 9, 1883, and began work the same day. At first they met in Eaton's room at the Wormley Hotel in Washington, but later secured quarters from the Interior Department. Their original staff consisted of four persons—the chief examiner, a secretary, a stenographer and a messenger. The jurisdiction of the civil service act then covered only a small part of the service.

The commissioners' first work was to devise examinations and draft rules for the administration of the service. There have been some changes and additions to the rules since 1883, but they remain substantially the same.

To accomplish these tasks required night and day work by the commission's inadequate staff, but the system was ready to go into operation on the date set by law. On July 12, 1883, the first examinations were held at Washington, and on July 18 at 23 other cities.

Has Grown in Scope.

With occasional losses, but with many important gains, the civil service syste mhas continued to grow both in scope and public esteem, its friends pointed out yesterday. Its support by political parties has been increased materially during the more than half a century the act has been in effect.

"Never, however, has there been a time when the civil service movement has not had the sympathy and approval of the American public," it was said at the commission's offices yesterday.

In the annual report of the commission, just made public, a strict adherence to the merit system in the selection of personnel was urged as a keynote. The report developed that the number of persons examined was larger than during any previous year. More than 843,000 came up for examination, an increase of approximately 63,000 over the previous year. Examinations were held for 1,495 kinds of positions, besides those for the mechanical trades and similar occupations.

Dodd's 'Insult' His Own View, HullTellsHitler

Envoy Now Private Citizen; May Talk as He Likes, Secretary Explains.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Hull met an official German protest against a bitter anti-Hitler speech by former Ambassador William E. Dodd yesterday with an explanation that American citizens enjoy the right of free speech.

Hans Heinrich Dieckhoff, the German Ambassador, visited the State Department to tell Hull that Dodd, who recently resigned from the Diplomatic Corps after five years as American envoy at Berlin, had insulted Hitler in an address in New York Thursday night.

In particular, he was aroused by Dodd's statements that under Hitler "almost as many personal opponents were killed in five years as Charles II (King of England) executed in 20 years of the seventeenth century," and that Hitler is "now more absolute than any medieval Emperor of Germany."

Hull replied that Dodd had resigned his ambassadorship, was now a private citizen and therefore enjoyed the freedom of speech guaranteed him by the Constitution. He added that since Dodd, having resigned, is a private citizen, his utterances do not represent the views of this Government.

The Secretary did not imply either that Dodd's expressions coincided or did not coincide with those of this Government.

Three-Line Reference.

Berlin, Jan. 14 (AP).—A three-line reference to the protest of the German Ambassador, Hans Heinrich Dieckhoff, to Secretary of State Cordell Hull was all that was permitted to be printed here today concerning the anti-Hitler speech of William E. Dodd, former Ambassador to Germany.

The item merely stated the Ambassador had protested against Dodd's "insulting references to Germany and the Fuehrer."

"We don't propose to take further notice," a government spokesman said.

2 Tipsy Bandits Barely Missed D.C. Police Trap

Detectives Were Waiting as Tippet Brothers Started South.

The Tippett brothers, Ellis and Ellsworth, who terrorized the city with seven holdups in 35 minutes, escaped by only an hour from a police "plant" which would have trapped them before they staged their drunken raid, it was learned last night.

Waiting for the boys to arrive at a relative's house in the 800 block of Maryland avenue northeast, four detectives learned after a two and a half hour vigil Wednesday afternoon that the pair had left for Richmond. Police believe the youthful bandits were warned away from the guarded house.

The Tippett brothers first aroused police suspicion, it was revealed yesterday, after a complaint Sunday night from Harry Gerber, proprietor of a grocery store at 606 B street northeast.

When the youths loitered ten minutes in his store after making a 5-cent candy purchase, Gerber went to a back room and notified Ninth Precinct police that he feared a hold-up.

Fleeing while Gerber made his telephone call, the men escaped police, but not Gerber's 20-year-old son Sigmund, Maryland University student, who pursued them in his automobile far enough to obtain the first five numbers of their Maryland license plate.

Swiftly eliminating nine Maryland automobiles which failed to tally with descriptions of the machine driven by the pair, the four detectives traced the other car in the series of ten license numbers to the Tippett brothers.

The gas station holdup engineered by the youths at 2600 Benning road northeast Monday night furnished confirmation for the previous description of the brothers and their car, and was the basis for the lookout broadcast a few hours after the Tippetts staged their two-man crime wave Wednesday night.

The four detectives who followed the trail of the young desperadoes were Detective Sergt. Robert Barrett, Detective Sergt. George Thornton, Precinct Detective G. L. Guest and Precinct Detective E. E. Scott.

Out at his lonely home in Ardmore, Md., late yesterday B. J. Tippett, 50-year-old father of the youthful gunmen, shook his head sadly. One of his four sons already is serving a sentence at Lorton, while another son is married and lives in Congress Heights.

"Folks tell me everything happens for the best," said Tippett, who separated from his wife last November.

"What can I do about it now?" continued the middle-aged electrician. "They told me they was going to join the Navy when they left in their mother's car last Tuesday, and I begged 'em not to go. I'm glad they got caught, else they might have been killed.

"Wilmer, my oldest boy, is down at Lorton. They convicted him of assaulting a young girl about two years ago. I worked hard all my life. Nobody's ever seen me go to a saloon to buy even a glass of beer, and I ain't ever seen the inside of a movie house."

Meanwhile, speedy prosecution was promised by Acting District Attorney David A. Pine, who is ready to place immediate charges before the grand jury, bringing the youths to trial after the anticipated indictment.

Lewis Is Pledged Support in Fight By Auto Workers

By the Associated Press.

The Committee for Industrial Organization won a pledge of "unwavering support" from the United Automobile Workers yesterday.

David Dubinsky, head of the powerful International Ladies Garment Workers Union, a C. I. O. affiliate, has blamed John L. Lewis for the breakdown of negotiations between his forces and the American Federation of Labor.

The automobile workers wired Lewis from Detroit they realized "industrial unionism" was the only way they could organize and reiterated their "faith in the program of the C. I. O."

Meanwhile, Lewis and one of his chief lieutenants, Philip Murray, went to the White House yesterday with a group of economists and business men to talk recovery with President Roosevelt.

Eighteen residents were nominated as candidates for a committee which will draw up a plan of medical service and present it at a later meeting of citizens. Seven of the 18 will be elected to the committe at a meeting to be held sometime next week.

Meanwhile the nominees, with a temporary citizens' committee headed by Harry E. Hesse, will select a physician who will serve on a fee basis until the co-operative society is placed in operation.

Nominees were Mrs. Herkus Letkemann, L. M. Slaughter, Leo Mullins, Hesse, Mrs. Robert Hayes, James A. Smith, Oscar C. Lightner, Ed Thornhill, Lindsay Thomas, A. M. Schwartz, Arthur Dickerman, Robert Dickham, Mrs. Bernice Nelson, Peter Carroll, Joseph Starck, Fred L. Wilde, Mrs. Bertha Mayrn, Stephen McAckrin.

Beard Removed From Lorton; Warring Mob in Same Cell Tier

Crime

In his letter to Cummings, Huff said:

"As you know, Beard was included in an exchange transfer between Atlanta Penitentiary and the Lorton Reformatory involving 28 prisoners. Since this transfer was made, new conditions have arisen which justify my requesting you to arrange for the re-transfer of Beard to the Atlanta Penitentiary or some other penal institution outside the District of Columbia.

Exchanged for "Desperate" Ones.

The 13 prisoners brought from Georgia, it was explained, were in exchange for 13 "desperate" inmates of the wall-less Lorton. The list of proposed transfers from Atlanta was first approved by Huff and Board of Public Welfare authorities.

Attorney General Cummings' answer to Huff read in part:

"After consideration of all aspects of the matter, an order has been issued by me directing the transfer of Sam Beard to the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga."

To Demand Explanation.

It also was learned that Commissioner Hazen today would demand an explanation from the Board of Public Welfare as to why Warring and his gang members were permitted to be returned to Lorton.

As in the case of Beard, Hazen fears Warring and his companions, although behind bars, will be able to contact underworld elements in Washington by means of "grapevine" channels.

Prisoners at Lorton are permitted visitors two Sundays a month, and may see their attorneys at any time. Determined efforts to seek the removal of Beard were prompted by predictions he would attempt to control the city's already thriving rackets by communicating with his henchmen on the "outside." It was reported he also welcomed the Lorton transfer because he was preparing to seek a hearing before the District Parole Board.

Kept in "Quarantine."

Since the transfer about ten days ago, Beard, Warring, Barnes and Montgomery have been kept in "quarantine" at Lorton, it was reported. They have been permitted no visitors or privileges, and are confined to the cell block usually reserved for incorrigible prisoners.

With Beard—serving a six-year sentence on gambling charges—now out of the way, it was indicated District leaders would concentrate immediately on efforts to obtain the removal of Warring and his companions.

Convicted in Shooting.

Warring, major-domo of the once flourishing gang, was convicted with his henchmen in the shooting of 23-year-old Joseph Edawrd O'Brien during a gang flareup in July, 1936.

Three other Warring gangsters convicted at the same time—John Sweeney, Clarence Ware and George F. Tear, brother of Richard Tear, fiance of the slain Corinna Loring—are serving sentences at Leavenworth Penitentiary.

"Rags" Warring, records show, is scheduled to be released next October, while the sentences of Barnes and Montgomery expire a month earlier.

In addition to Beard, Warring and his companions, the other prisoners transferred from Atlanta were Edgar Randolph Perrygo, serving 20 years on a second degree murder charge; Benjamin L. Marshall, 20 years, second degree murder; James Steele, 20 years, robbery; George S. Davis, 20 years, second degree murder; Parker H. Lee, 29 years, second degree murder; Clarence Bowie, 16 years, assault with intent to rape; William H. Preston, 10 years, housebreaking and larceny; James W. Handy, 10 years, housebreaking, larceny, grand larceny and joyriding, and Morris Austin, 10 years, robbery.

Indians Recover Rain Relic From Museum in N. Y.

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—The Gros Ventres Indians successfully ended today their quest for a sacred "rain bundle" whose 31 years' absence they blamed for prolonged searing drought on the tribe's North Dakota reservation.

Three tribal representatives, headed by 84-year-old Foolish Bear, consummated an exchange of relics with the Heye Foundation's Museum of the American Indian by which the bundle will be returned to their Western home.

The buckskin bundle containing the sacred skulls of two mystic thunder birds was traded to a white man in 1907 by a custodian who had embraced Christianity.

21 Years in Jail Is Meted Out to Capital Gunman

In a drastic move to curb Washington's current wave of crime, Justice Jesse C. Adkins in Criminal Court yesterday sentenced a colored gunman to a minimum of 21 years and a maximum of 37 years in jail on armed robbery charges.

Accused of robbing eight stores and filling stations, David C. Johnson was arraigned before the court while an attorney argued for leniency.

"This is armed robbery," said Justice Adkins, "and I am going to break it up."

Charges against Johnson date from January 12, 1937. His last offense, the court was told, occurred November 12.

Howard Butler, reputedly a companion of Johnson during the armed forays, was given two consecutive sentences of three to five years. He is already serving 6 to 12 years on another count and yesterday's sentence boosted his total term to 12 to 22 years.

the death in Providence Hospital on Monday of Charles G. Rawlings, 46, of 512 K street southeast. He was found unconscious Christmas Eve in the 500 block of Virginia avenue southeast.

In a second inquest yesterday, a coroner's jury ordered Clyde B. Vaughan, 46, of 2321 Eighteenth street northwest, held for Police Court action in connection with the death of Mary Snowden, colored, 55, of 654 Morton street northwest. The woman, the fifth traffic victim of the year, died in Emergency Hospital Thursday. She was injured at Sixteenth street and Meridian place northwest.

Police testified yesterday that after the Christmas Eve accident Boan and two passengers in his car declared at first they had not run over the man.

A Signed Statement.

Later, Detective Sergt. Jeremiah Flaherty told the jury, Boan gave him a signed statement that his car had struck Rawlings.

Boan, when he took the stand, testified he had never admitted having struck the man. He told the jury he was getting his car into motion after having stopped at a light when a bystander called "Look out, there's a man in the street."

Last May Boan was held for Police Court action by a coroner's jury after the death of Elmer Barham, 39, of 102 Ridge road southeast.

Barham was alleged to have been thrown from Boan's car when it swerved on Anacostia road southeast. Boan later was exonerated in Police Court.

Boan lives at 4002 D street southeast.

U.S. Combats $8,000,000 Suit Over Air Mails

'Collusion' in Issuing of Route Certificates Is Charged.

By the Associated Press.

The Justice Department asked the United States Court of Claims yesterday to set aside more than $8,000,000 of damage claims filed against the Government after cancellation of air-mail contracts in 1934.

The claims were filed by seven major airlines for loss of profits and other damages.

Assistant Attorney General Sam E. Whitaker filed yesterday Government replies to each suit and also filed nine counter-claims against the air companies.

In the latter the Government argued that it, instead of the airlines, was entitled to reparations.

Route certificates issued during the Hoover Administration were illegal, Whitaker asserted, and "were the result of collusion on the part of the mail carrying companies to avoid provisions of the statutes which require competitive bidding."

The companies' claims, filed by airlines in 1935 were: United States Airways, Inc., $335,498; Kohler Aviation Corporation, $138,368; Pennsylvania Airlines, Inc., $554,726; Eastern Air Transport, Inc., $2,086,707; Boering Air Transport, Inc., $1,156,573 and $2,287,931; Pacific Air Transport Co., $707,519; United Airlines Transport Corporation, $666,748 and $291,782.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

Low Cards Are Useful.

The letter that most bridge players wrote to Santa Claus probably went something like this: "Please, dear Santa, send me lots of Aces and Kings. I need 'em!" Undoubtedly, honors are pleasant things to hold, but the crucial point of many a hand is to sacrifice, or suppress an honor because a low card can do a better job. Witness today's hand. West, dealer.

Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dbl.	Pass	2 ♠
Pass	3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠
Pass	4 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

North did not like to raise his partner's suit with only a doubleton, hence adopted the good expedient of bidding three of a minor. As North properly reckoned, South might have made his jump response with a good hand containing only five spades. Before North could support with safety he had to hear a rebid of the suit.

West opened the diamond King and, when East signalled with the nine, led the diamond Queen to the second round. Then, on the correct analysis that the greatest chance of defeating the contract lay in taking two trump tricks, West carefully led a low diamond to the third trick. The message conveyed by this play was unmistakable, namely, that West wanted East to ruff with the highest trump possible. Obviously, since West had held the first two tricks with the King and Queen, if he had been able to take another diamond trick he would have led the Ace with which he was marked. Had he wanted merely to force the declarer, he would have followed the same course. Thus, his play of the low diamond was easy to read. East duly ruffed with the spade 10 and, although declarer overruffed, West's A-9-7 of trumps were impregnable for two tricks, which meant the defeat of the contract.

Certainly the defensive coup used in this hand is simplicity itself. Yet, I have seen countless players in a position similar to West's continue with their high honors instead of assuring themselves of cooperation from partner by sending a message that cannot be misconstrued.

Holding Companies' Abolition In All Lines Asked by Roosevelt

Molasses Co.; John L. Lewis, C. I. O. chairman; his lieutenant, Philip Murray, and Adolph A. Berle, former New Deal brain truster and an authority on American corporations.

Although it is not known what transpired between the President and his visitors as they talked in the residential part of the White House, it is known that several of the group went to the meeting with the strong conviction the enunciation by the President of a definite, clear policy regarding his attitude toward business would be the most helpful step that possibly could be taken.

Program Held Lacking.

They felt that the New Deal lacked any concrete program for handling the present economic recession and that the cross currents and pronouncements of secondary figures in the Administration during recent days had caused confusion and retarded efforts to prevent the deterioration of the economic recovery achieved during the last four years. There was no discussion at the meeting, it was said, of the President's proposal for the elimination of all holding companies.

The group which conferred for more than one hour with the President designated Lewis as their spokesmen. None would elaborate what he said. Nor would he. As the other conferees stood around him under the White House portico, nodding their agreement, Lewis said:

"We attended this conference with the President and discussed with him the gravity of the existing economic and industrial situation in this country. This group had some preliminary discussions and were impressed with the desirability, if at all possible, or working out with the President and the Administration some definite program of action by Government, business and labor.

Wall Street "Amazed."

The President's remarks at his press conference regarding holding companies, however, overshadowed his conference with the business group. It was his revelation that he was aiming toward the elimination of all holding companies in all types of business which, according to the Associated Press, caused "Wall Street to blink its eyes in amazement." There it was said that more than one-half of all companies whose securities were widely held were, in some degree, holding companies.

Mr. Roosevelt's remarks also startled Capitol Hill, and while there was commendation for him among some of his left-wing supporters, the general sentiment seemed to be that the President would have a difficult time obtaining legislation to achieve his objective. It was recalled that the battle over the utility holding company bill was one of the sharpest to occur during the New Deal regime, and that bill abolished only the super-holding company.

The President's declaration favoring the elimination of all holding companies of all types occurred during a discussion of a recent plea by Wendell Willkie, president of the Commonwealth Southern Corporation, for a relaxation of the death sentence imposed on utility holding companies.

Advice Is Disdained.

In November when conferring with the President, Willkie left with the President a memorandum of steps which the Administration should take in order to restore the confidence of investors in utility securities. One proposal was that the death sentence on holding companies be relaxed to apply only to financial structures hereafter set up.

At several recent press conferences the President has been pressed for his reaction to the Willkie proposals and he promised he would bring the utility executive's memorandum to a press conference and comment on it seriatim. This he did yesterday.

When he came to the proposal regarding a relaxation of the holding company provisions, he said he never could agree to that—that the utility holding company must go. He reiterated the contentions of his Jackson Day dinner speech that the holders of $600,000,000 of securities controlled a $13,000,000,000 industry—again adding that it was a case of a 4-inch tail wagging a 96-inch dog.

Would Expand Law.

The President went on to point out that the operating utility companies were all right. The holding companies caused their trouble, he said, asserting that one obstacle in the way of raising funds for some of them was the insistence of their holding company owners that the financing be done in New York. Instead of relaxing the holding company law, the President said he favored expanding it to eliminate even the first degree holding companies.

This brought a question as to whether he was aiming at an elimination of all types of holding companies and he replied in the affirmative. Asked how he proposed to do this, the President said he had not yet reached that point. He went on to point out that bank holding companies were particularly objectionable. The small banker, he asserted, rapidly was disappearing. He said he could not understand why independent banks could not now flourish under Government insurance of deposits.

Favors Local Option.

Discussing other points raised by the Willkie memorandum, Mr. Roosevelt reiterated that the question of whether a municipality should have its own electrical system was one for the decision of local authorities. As for the Federal loans and grants, he said these had been upheld in the recent Supreme Court decision on that subject.

He said he agreed that duplicating facilities should be avoided wherever possible and that municipalities wishing publicly owned systems should make an effort to buy out existing private lines. The problem was being approached in this manner in the Columbia River basin, he said.

The President also dissented from Willkie's proposal that the prudent investment theory be used as a yardstick for the valuation of utility properties hereafter constructed. The President said that if the reproduction cost theory of valuation is improper now it was improper in the past and no moral right exists to leave water and wind in the existing capital structures of the utilities.

He also pointed out that Willkie made no mention of the amortization of securities. If sinking funds had been provided for outstanding securities, the utilities would not now be experencing so much financing difficulty, the President remarked.

Playwright Picks Poor Spot to Sock Critic on the Jaw

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—The physiognomy of Jack Kirkland, playwright, bore slight evidence today of the vigor with which friends of Richard Watts, jr., defend the integrity of his dramatic criticism.

Kirkland wrote the stage version of John Steinbeck's "Tortilla Flat," which opened here Wednesday night.

Watts, critic for the New York Herald Tribune, saw the play, didn't like it and said so in print.

So, encountering Watts last night, Kirkland clipped him on the jaw. But he made the error of choosing the Artists and Writers Restaurant for his arena.

The place seemed to seethe with Watts' partisans, and accounts are that Kirkland caught his share of flying fists.

Police to War On Violators of Hand Signals

Autoists Who Disobey Rules Face Arrest, Warns Holmes.

Pleased with the results of adding 25 motorcycle men to the police force two weeks ago, Inspector W. E. Holmes yesterday said Traffic Bureau police are about to begin a concerted drive against violations of the rules for hand-signals.

Chief Faults Cited.

Pulling out from the curb without first signaling, or making turns, or stopping without first indicating with a hand signal, are causes of some of the worst accidents each year, Holmes said.

"Our men are going to enforce the laws rigorously, and show no leniency. Hand signals are essential for safe driving, and the men are going to see the rules are obeyed in every respect."

The Traffic Bureau inspector said in two weeks the 25 additional motorcycle men have helped traffic conditions appreciably, speeding up the flow of traffic and yet preventing reckless driving. He said men are assigned to main arteries during rush hours, and conditions have improved materially in only a brief time.

Traffic accidents during December decreased slightly more than 8 per cent over the same month in 1936, William A. Van Duzer, director of the department of vehicles and traffic, announced yesterday.

Accidents Drop.

Appearing before the regular meeting of the police precinct captains yesterday at Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen's office, Van Duzer said there were 1,147 accidents last month, as compared with 1,257 during December, 1936.

The greatest number of accidents during December, 1937, occurred in the Second Precinct, where 280 traffic mishaps were reported. Even here, Van Duzer stated, there was a 16 per cent decrease over the same period last year when 309 accidents were reported.

"The greatest decrease was noted in the Fifth Precinct, where 29 accidents were reported during December, 1937, as compared with 86 last December," Van Duzer reported.

During the month of November, 1937, a decrease of 7.5 per cent accidents were reported, as compared with the same period last year.

H. L. Allen to Head District Oil Group

H. L. Allen, of the Texas Co., was elected chairman of the executive committee, District of Columbia Petroleum Association, at a meeting of the organization Thursday.

Other officers included Guy Livingston, Sherwood Brothers, Ind., vice chairman, and M. C. Mallon, secretary.

The committee announced a six-point program for the coming year:

1. To insist that Congress and the District use all gasoline and motor vehicle tax revenues for street and highway purposes only.
2. To advocate fair taxation of gasoline and equitable treatment of motorist taxpayers.
3. To urge that the date for registration of motor vehicles be postponed to April 1.
4. To render assistance to the District and Federal authorities in detection and elimination of gasoline tax evasion.
5. To urge repeal of the Federal gasoline and lubricating oil taxes.
6. To oppose all tax and other proposals inimical to the petroleum industry and its motorist customers.

House Tax Report Urges Relief to Business; 'Family' Firm Penalties Among 63 Reforms

Tax

substantial stimulation to business by the enactment of the recommendations of the subcommittee into law and that they will bring into being a well-balanced tax system, improved in respect to certainty and equity," Representative Vinson reported to Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the Ways and Means committee.

But minority members commented on the complex nature of the reforms proposed, and recalled the subcommittee's stated intent to bring out a "simplified" tax bill.

"The only comment I care to make at this time is with regard to the complicated provisions that the new draft will carry," Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member of the committee, told the House.

"If I were a lawyer and specialized in a clientele requiring tax advice, I should expect to reap a harvest and set up a well-padded bank account. It would be interesting to know the amount of time and the amount of money taxpayers would expend in trying to make honest income tax returns."

Revenues Unaffected.

Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, who has promised deep modification and possible repeal of some of the current levies, declined comment on the report, but said his prior statements would stand.

Spokesmen for the committee said the total of tax receipts under the plan will not be changed "to any substantial extent." They said income revenue estimates for 1938 of $2,687,000,000 ($1,233,000,000 on individual income; $1,184,000,000 on corporations and $250,000,000 in back taxes) would be largely unaffected.

Noting complaints that the undivided profits tax is discouraging legitimate business expansion and burdening small, weak and debt-ridden corporations, the subcommittee declared severity of the levy "has often been overstated."

"Your sub-committee has examined these complaints and believes there has been much exaggeration as to hardships in the great majority of cases," the report said. "It is believed, however, that a substantial number of cases of hardship exist and that in such cases there is merit in the complaints."

20 Per Cent Maximum.

Covering "the whole field of internal revenue taxation," the recommendations ranged from changes in tax administration, gift, estate and excise levies to undivided profits and capital gains tax proposals, considered the crux of the report.

The present undivided profits tax, enacted in 1936 to force distribution of earnings as taxable dividends, imposed a surtax graduated from 7 to 27 per cent on earnings withheld, in addition to the rates of 8 to 15 per cent on net income.

This would now be superseded by a "general rule" imposing a tentative tax equal to 20 per cent of the adjusted net income of corporations earning more than $25,000, but allowing a credit of four-tenths of 1 per cent for each 10 per cent of earnings distributed. Studded with technical credits and deductions, the tax would operate to tax these large corporations 20 per cent if they withheld all of their earnings, and 16 per cent if they paid all out as dividends.

$25,000 Firms Exempted.

But corporations earning les than $25,000 would be completely exempted from the undivided profits tax feature. These smaller corporations would pay instead a flat "normal" tax of 12½ per cent upon the first $5,000 of earnings; 14 per cent upon the next $15,000 and 16 per cent upon the last $5,000 up to $25,000 of earnings.

In between these two groups of corporate taxpayers, the sub-committee worked out an involved "notch" system of taxation for companies earning "slightly more" than $25,000 to avoid a penalty jump between the two major schedules. This bloc of "transition" corporations would be given a choice between taxation under the 16 to 20 per cent "general rule" and a proposed "notch" method, whichever tax was lesser.

On the first $25,000, after credit deduction these companies would be taxed at the "normal" 12½ to 16 per cent rates. This tax would be added to special levies on the remaining income over $25,000, computed by adding 32 per cent of the ordinary net income in this division to 12 per cent of intercorporate dividend income in the same division.

The sub-committee recommended that corporations having a net operating loss for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1937, be allowed to carry the loss over into the succeeding taxable year and credit it to dividends paid, with certain limitations.

"Close" Firms Singled Out.

The group singled out for penalty treatment corporations controlled by families or outsiders numbering ten people or less, because, Vinson said, such companies "have chiefly been used to avoid individual surtaxes." While other corporations would be given substantial tax relief, this "closely held" group would pay a tax virtually as high as the present undivided profits levy, unless dividends were paid out for taxation in the individual surtax brackets.

If corporations in the "closely held" basket earned more than $50,000 a year and distributed less than 60 per cent of their earnings, they would be forced to pay not only the 16 to 20 per cent undivided profits tax but also an additional 20 per cent flat tax, after deducting $40,000 or 30 per cent, whichever is greater.

Miner in Hospital After Four Days Lost Underground

Welch, W. Va., Jan. 14 (AP).—Manuel Cordozo, 46, rested tonight in a hospital bed after four days of wandering through the underground mazes of the Hemphill mine.

The Portuguese miner, who emerged weak and haggard from the pit today, told of his experience through an interpreter.

Monday, he said, he went to his customary working place and started to leave that night, but changed his course because of a water hole.

Minnesotans Sit Down To Get Increased Relief

Wadena, Minn., Jan. 14 (AP).—More than 150 relief clients and members of Wadena County Workers Alliance began a sit-down strike in the courthouse today to force the county welfare board to hear their demands for increased relief allowances. The strikers took possession of the district court room and telegraphed Gov. Elmer Benson urging him to co-operate.

300 Dismissed By Rail Board; Funds Run Out

Move Also Revealed to Cut Staff of Bituminous Coal Commission.

Dwindling funds necessitate dismissal of 300 employes today, the Railroad Retirement Board has announced.

The curtailment was forced, it was explained, because the $2,300,000 for the present fiscal year is inadequate, and a deficiency appropriation has not been passed by Congress.

During the week 43 employes were dismissed. The local staff is to number about 1,000. This will slow up the work of administering the new pension system covering railway workers of the country, it was said.

A "carefully planned" move to reduce its staff to permanent size also was revealed by the National Bituminous Coal Commission as it denied reports that a major shakeup was in progress.

During the past week 22 employes have been dismissed, two of whom were in the Washington office, it was stated. It was indicated that within the next two or three months there would be further reduction in the staff of 900.

Dismissed employes of the retirement board sought assistance from the Civil Service Commission. The commission offered use of its regular replacement service.

Unions of Government workers planned no protests, because dismissals were due to lack of funds.

The coal commission yesterday abandoned its personnel committee, of three commissioners, which had assembled the staff and set coal prices in record time. E. Stone Leizear, executive director, took over personnel work.

Honest Attitude.

The Social Security Board's annual report seems to treat very honestly the board's attitude toward the personnel. It is stated in plain language: "The necessity for internal transfers and promotions to utilize the abilities of employes to the fullest and to develop a career service has been recognized." Otherwise, the board tells of its aims toward training of personnel and of the awkward situation caused by a scattering of its forces, which, the board believes, should be under a single roof.

You have, at times, heard isolated dissension among certain supervisors of the board and the SSB Union of the U. F. W. A., but in the broad picture of the relations harmony exists. Just yesterday, we discussed the SSB situation with leading members of the U. F. W. A. Union of the U. F. W. A., but in 10 feels that the personnel policy of the board is among the best within the Government service." In many instances, "the negotiations have been amicable and adjustments satisfactory to both parties have been achieved," is was commented.

The union says it has gotten the board to set up machinery to increase the effectiveness of the board's career service policy. To this end, the union's promotions, transfers and periodic reclassification agreements with the board have been embodied in the board's administrative orders, it was pointed out.

The board's appeal for more space, for a concentration of its activities, is an urgent one still, the report says. It was able to contract for additional space both in the regional areas and in Washington, "but the need for more adequate quarters is still urgent." A large part of the staff is still located in offices that were leased temporarily in Baltimore; the Washington staff is housed in widely separated buildings, many of which were not planned for the type of activity the board requires. The conditions complicate the operations of the several divisions, render a perfect co-ordination impossible, and in the words of the report:

"The board believes it will not be possible to attain maximum efficiency of personnel and economy of operation until the present adverse conditions are rectified, preferably by an arrangement which permits co-ordination in one building of all activities of the headquarters staff."

Photography Class.

Attention, photographers: The Agriculture Department's Graduate School announces its course in basic photography, which will be held on Mondays and Wednesdays, beginning February 2, at 4:50 p. m., with Carl H. Hanson and other specialists in charge. The registration will be limited. There are no special prerequisites; the course will be elementary and basic in character, designed to meet the needs of the amateur. The tentative outline of the course is as follows:

Elementary photographic optics; selection and use of photographic lenses; cameras and shutters; films and plates; the photography of colored objects; exposure; elementary photographic chemistry; preparing solution; darkroom arrangements, conveniences and practices; developers and development; the technique of developing roll films, film packs and plates; the science of printing; the practice of printing; the camera in use; selection and arrangement of the subject; outdoor photography; enlarging papers, equipment and devices; how to make enlargements; finishing photographic prints; miniature camera photography; home portraitures; lighting and posing in portraiture; indoor photography; line work and copying; color photography; amateur motion picture cameras, equipment and materials, and how to make amateur motion pictures.

Meet the Chief.

We liked the spontaneous way the men and women of the Bureau of Air Commerce joined the other day in honoring John S. Collins, the administrative division chief, on the occasion of his thirty-fifth anniversary with the Federal service. The gathering showed not the slightest premeditation; it seemed as if they all, by a single impulse, went to the hearing room to shake their chief's hand simply because they wanted to and not by any calculated arrangement. And there could have been no nicer tribute than that paid by Fred D. Fagg, jr., the bureau director, in opening the session. This column now takes pleasure in presenting a background of Collins' career—a career significant for the faithful service of the subject and because of the fact that he did well in the Federal service because of his own personal merit.

He was born in Burgaw, N. C., was educated in the public schools of Burgaw and Wilmington and at a business college in Charlotte. He was appointed to the Coast and Geodetic Survey as a writer on January 13, 1903; was transferred to the Bureau of Manufacturers (now Foreign and Domestic Commerce) in 1910, where he serves as secretary to the director, appointing clerk, chief of the Correspondence Division, and assistant chief clerk. In 1919, he was sent to Phoenix, Ariz., to become chief clerk of the Interior Department's Indian School, later coming to Washington for a position as clerk in the Indian Office. In 1923, he went to Lawrence, Kans., to become chief clerk to the chief supervisor of education in the Indian Service, and in 1924, Collins again became chief clerk of an Indian school, this time at Albuquerque, N. Mex. Returning to Washington in 1927 as an assistant clerk in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, he was transferred to the Aeronautics branch as assistant chief of the Administrative Division. He was appointed chief in 1935.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Friday Morning Music Club presents Fanny Ross Henbest, pianist, and Ina Holtzscheiter, soprano (Marjorie Davis, accompanist) in Barker Hall. Program: Sonata in E flat major, Op. 31 (Beethoven), Arabeske, Op. 18 (Schumann), Rhapsodie in B minor, Op. 79 (Brahms), "Porgi amor" (Mozart), "Le Rossignol et la Rose" (Saint-Saens), "La Chanson d'Halewyn" (Dupuis), "Ariette Oubliee" (Pick-Mangiagalli), "The Wren" (Benedict).

Members and guests of the Friday morning Music Club derived much enjoyment yesterday from the sincere and unpretentious musicianship of the two young artists who offered the hour's program. Neither Mrs. Henbest nor Miss Holtzscheiter is afflicted with the insidious vanity which sometimes accompanies proficiency, and their work has no trace of ostentation. Both possess that natural directness of approach which engages one's sympathetic attention, and their care is expended not upon display but upon honest interpretation.

Mrs. Henbest gave a vitalized and imaginative reading of Beethoven's E flat major sonata from Opus 31, obviously engrossed in the expression of its poesy. There was evident absorption also in her treatment of Schumann and Brahms, whose stylistic mannerisms she faithfully observed. She has a fleet technique and a light touch which serve her well in clarity of phrasing, and her dynamic resources are sedulously restrained. Her playing reflects the refinement of one who has an intelligent appreciation of musical values.

The lyric soprano of Miss Holtzscheiter has a pure quality that falls refreshingly on the ear. An occasional veiling of its limpidity hinted at a hoarseness which she perseveringly overcame, and her singing was thoroughly enjoyable for the graceful pliancy of the voice and the accuracy of attack. Her agility in fioritura was commendable in the aria from "Le Nozze di Figaro," the charming vocalise from Saint-Saens' incidental music for Dieulafoy's "Parysatis," and Sir Julius Benedict's "The Wren," which had the adornment of a flute obligato by Domenico Isacone.

Her interpretative finesse was manifest in two unfamiliar songs, Albert Dupuis' "La Chanson d' Halewyn" and an "Ariette Oubliee" by Riccardo Pick-Mangiagalli.

Text of House Sub-committee Report Urging Tax Relief, 63 Reforms

These chiefs of business and labor were summoned to the White House yesterday for a conference with the President on the current economic situation. They are (left to right) John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O.; Charles W. Taussig, president of the American Molasses Co.; Owen D. Young, chairman of the board, General Electric Co.; A. A. Berle, former Administration advisor; Thomas W. Lamont, a J. P. Morgan & Co. partner, and Phillip Murray, a C. I. O. official.

Modification of Profits and Capital Gains Levies Favored.

The following are the 63 detailed recommendations of the House Ways and Means Subcommittee for revision of the present business tax structure.

CODE OF INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS.

Recommendation No. 1.

It is recommended that as soon as possible the codification of internal-revenue laws, as described in this report, be enacted as law and not merely as prima facie evidence of the law as in the case of the present United States Code.

INCOME TAXES ON CORPORATIONS.

General Rule.

Recommendation No. 2.

The committee recommends the following tax on corporations, with the exception of certain classes, stated hereinafter:

A tentative tax equal to 20 per cent of the adjusted net income, which is defined as the net income reduced by the credit provided in section 26 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1936, relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations. From this tentative tax is to be sutracted (1) 16 per cent of the credit for dividends received provided in section 26 (b) of the 1936 act amended as proposed in Recommendation No. 15); and (2) 4 per cent of the dividends-paid credit (computed as outlined in Recommendation No. 13) but not to exceed 4 per cent of the adjusted net income. The remainder is the tax.

Exceptions From General Rule.

Recommendation No. 3.

Corporations with net income of not more than $25,000.—It is proposed that the tax on corporations having a net income of not more than $25,000 shall be the equivalent of the normal tax under section 13 of the 1936 act, with slightly increased rates. The tax recommended is to be upon the net income in excess of the credit provided in section 26 (a) of the 1936 act (relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations) and the dividends-received credit provided in section 26 (b) of the 1936 act (amended as provided in Recommendation No. 15), and to be equal to the sum of the following:

(1) 12½ per cent upon the first $5,000 of this excess amount;

(2) 14 per cent upon the next $15,000 of this excess amount;

(3) 16 per cent upon the last $5,000 of this excess amount.

Recommendation No. 4.

Corporations with net income slightly above $25,000.—Inasmuch as a tax computed under the general rule in the case of a corporation with a net income of slightly more than $25,000 will result in a tax several hundreds of dollars in excess of the tax which would be payable if the net income were only $25,000, it is proposed that any corporation subject to tax under the general rule will have its tax computed under the following plan, if (and only if) a tax so computed is less than a tax computed under the general rule.

The net income is to be divided into two divisions, the first division consisting of $25,000, and the second division consisting of the remainder of the net income.

To the first division is to be allocated, until an aggregate of $25,000 has been so allocated: First, the portion of the gross income consisting of interest allowed as a credit by section 26 (a) of the 1936 act (relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations); second, the portion of the gross income consisting of dividends received of the class with respect to which a credit is lowed by section 26 (b) of the 1936 act; and third, an amount equal to the excess, if any, of $25,000 over the amounts already allocated to the first division.

To the second division is to be allocated, until there has been so allocated an aggregate equal to the excess of the net income over $25,000: First, any interest allowed as a credit by section 26 (a) of the 1936 act, which is not already allocated to the first division; second, any dividends received of the clas with respect to which a credit is allowed by section 26 (b) of the 1936 ac,t which are not already allocated to the first division; and third, an amount equal to the excess, if any, of the net income over the sum of $25,000 plus the amounts already (b) of the 1936 act, which are not The tax under this alternative plan is to be equal to the sum of the following:

(1) A tax on the $25,000 allocated to the first division, computed under the plan applicable to corporations having a net income of not more than $25,000, on the basis of the allocation made to the first division and as if the amounts so allocated constituted the entire net income.

(2) Twelve per cent of the dividends received allocated as such to the second division.

(3) Thirty-two per cent of the remainder of the amount allocated to the second division, except interest allowed as a credit by section 26 (a) of the 1936 act, which shall be free of tax.

Recommendation No. 5.

Mutual investment companies.—It is recommended that mutual investment companies, as defined in section 48 of the 1936 act be excepted from the general rule, and from the tax on corporations having a net income of not more than $25,000, and in lieu shall pay a tax of 16 per cent on their undistributed net income, which is to be defined as the net income minus (1) interest allowed as a credit by section 26 (a) of the 1936 act (relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and, Government corporations); (2) dividends paid during the taxable year, less the credit allowed by section 26 (a).

Recommendation No. 6.

Insurance companies.—It is recommended that insurance companies subject to tax under section 201, 204, or 207 of the 1936 act, continue to be taxed as under existing law, except that the rate shall be 16 per cent, instead of 15 per cent.

Recommendaion No. 7.

Banks—It is recommended that banks (as defined in section 104 of the 1936 act) be excepted from the general rule and from the tax on corporations having a net income of not more than $25,000, and in lieu shall pay a tax of 16 per cent on the net income in excess of the credits provided in sections 26 (a) and 26 (b).

Recommendation No. 8.

Bankruptcy and receiverships—It is recommended that domestic corporations which for any portion of the taxable year are in bankruptcy under the laws of the United States, or are insolvent and in receivership in any court of the United States or of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, shall be subject to tax like other corporations, except that if the corporation is taxable under the general rule above outlined, it shall be allowed as a subtraction (from the tentative tax of 20 per cent of the adjusted net income) of 4 per cent of the adjusted net income, in lieu of 4 per cent of the dividends-paid credit.

Recommendation No. 9.

Joint-stock land banks.—It is recommended that joint-stock land banks, organized under the Federal farm loan act, as amended, shall be subject to tax like other corporations, except that if the corporation is taxable under the general rule above outlined, it shall be allowed as a subtraction (from the tentative tax of 20 per cent of the adjusted net income) of 4 per cent of the adjusted net income, in lieu of 4 per cent of the dividends-paid credit.

Recommendation No. 10.

Foreign corporations:—It is recommended that foreign corporations engaged in trade or business within the United States or having an office or place of business therein shall continue to be taxed as under existing law, except that the rate shall be 20 per cent instead of 22 per cent.

Recommendation No. 11.

China Trade Act corporations.—It is recommended that corporations organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, shall continue to be taxed as under existing law, except that the rate shall be 16 per cent instead of 15 per cent.

Recommendation No. 12.

Corporations deriving income from United States possessions.—It is recommended that corporations which, by reason of deriving a large portion of their gross income from sources within a possession of the United States, are entitled to the benefits of section 251, shall continue to be taxed as under existing law, except that the rate shall be 16 per cent instead of 15 per cent.

Dividends-Paid Credit.

Recommendation No. 13:

It is recommended that the dividends-paid credit provided in section 27 of the 1936 act be amended in the following particulars:

(1) The dividends-paid credit for any taxable year shall be the sum of (a) the basic surtax credit for such year, as defined below; and (b) the dividend carry-over from the two preceding years provided below.

(2) The basic surtax credit for any taxable year shall be the sum of—

(a) The dividends paid during the taxable year, reduced by the amount of the credit provided in section 26 (a) of the 1936 act relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations;

(b) The "consent dividends credit" provided in Recommendation No. 14.

(c) The net operating loss for the preceding taxable year, as computed under Recommendation No. 16, but not in excess of the adjusted net income for the taxable year;

(d) The bank affiliate credit for the taxable year provided in section 26 (d) of the 1936 act, but not in excess of the adjusted net income for the taxable year.

The aggregate of the net operating loss and bank affiliate credit under (c) and (d) above should not exceed the adjusted net income for the taxable year.

(3) The dividend carry-over from the two preceding taxable years (including taxable years beginning after December 31, 1935) should be continued under the same method of arithmetical computation used in section 27 (b) of the 1936 act, but with the substitution of the basic surtax credit as above defined, in lieu of dividends paid as under existing law. The consumption should be as follows in the case of any taxable year: The sum of—

[Note.—In the following statement there have, for purposes of illustration, been inserted in parentheses, after the various years referred to, the appropriate year intended, on the assumption that it is the taxable year 1941 into which the dividend carry-over from two preceding taxable years is to be carried.]

(a) The amount of the basic surtax credit for the second preceding taxable year (1939), reduced by the adjusted net income for such year (1939), and further reduced by the amount, if any, by which the adjusted net income for the first preceding taxable year (1940) exceeds the sum of—

(A) the basic surtax credit for such year (1940); and

(B) the excess, if any, of the basic surtax credit for the third preceding taxable year (1938) over the adjusted net income for such year (1938). (Not to apply if such third preceding year begins before January 1, 1936.)

(b) The amount, if any, by which the basic surtax credit for the first preceding taxable year (1940) exceeds the adjusted net income for such year (1940).

In the case of a preceding taxable year, referred to in the above computation, which begins in 1936 or 1937, the basic surtax credit should be confined to the dividends paid during the year, and the adjusted net income should be the adjusted net income as defined in section 14 of the Revenue Act of 1936.

Recommendation No. 14.

It is recommended that there be established a new credit, to be a part of the "basic surtax credit" above recommended (Recommendation No. 13), and to be known as the "consent dividends credit," based upon the agreement by shareholders to include in their gross income, as taxable dividends, certain amounts retained by the corporation and not distributed to shareholders. The specific recommendations are:

(a) Corporations not entitled to credit—A corporation should not be entitled to the consent dividends credit—

(1) If there is outstanding at the close of its taxable year any preferred stock which is or may be participating as to further dividends after guaranteed dividends have been paid on it; or

(2) If no such stock, then if at the close of its taxable year any preferred stock which is or may be participating as to further dividends after guaranteed dividends have been paid on it; or

(2) If no such stock, then if at the close of the taxable year all dividends (for taxable year and all prior years) have not been fully paid on all other preferred stock; or

(3) If at any time during the taxable year the corporation has taken any steps in, or in pursuance of a plan of, liquidation (complete or partial) of all or any part of its stock (other than preferred stock).

(b) Shareholders' consents—In order to become entitled to any consent dividends credit the corporation must file with its return (in accordance with regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the secretary) signed consents, under oath, by each shareholder (on last day of the corporation's taxable year) of all classes of stock other than preferred stock. In such consent the shareholder must agree that he will include in his return (for his taxable year in which or with which the taxable year of the corporation ends), as a taxable dividend, his pro-rata share of the total amount so agreed by all such shareholders to be included in their gross incomes.

The amounts so agreed to be included in gross income should be taxable as a dividend, regardless of whether the distribution by the corporation of such total amount, had actual distribution been made, would have been in whole or in part a taxable dividend. If the shareholder is a corporation, the amount so agreed to be included in gross income shall be considered as earnings and profits of the taxable year and therefore to be included in the computation of accumulated earnings and profits.

(b) Amount of consent dividends credit.—The corporation should be entitled to the credit, as a part of its basic surtax credit, but only in an amount equal to such part of the total sum so covered by shareholders' consents as it would have been entitled to count as a art of its basic surtax credit, if actual distribution of such total sum had been made in cash.

(d) Basis of stock in hand of shareholder.—A shareholder who includes in his gross income the amount he agrees so to include, should be permitted to add to the basis of his stock, not the amount so included, but only his pro rata share of the consent dividends credit of the corporation under paragraph (c) above.

(e) Effect on capital account of corporation.—The amount of the consent dividends credit allowed under paragraph (c) above should be considered as a contribution to the capital of the corporation, and the earnings and profits should be correspondingly reduced.

(f) Consent to regulations.—The shareholders' consents, and their filing by the corporation, should be considered as a consent by the shareholders, and by the corporation, to all regulations prescribed before the filing of the return by the corporation.

Dividends Received Credit.

Recommendation No. 15.

It is recommended that the 85 per cent credit for intercorporate dividends provided in section 26 (b) of the 1936 act be amended so that the credit shall not exceed 85 per cent of the adjusted net income (net income minus interest allowed as a credit by section 26 (a), relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations).

Net Operating Losses.

Recommendation No. 16.

It is recommended that corporations having a net operating loss for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1937, shall have such loss carried over into the succeeding taxable year and in effect added to the dividends paid in such year, in an amount not exceeding the adjusted net income for such year. The result will be to permit the corporation to reduce its tax by 4 per cent of such net operating loss, but not to reduce its tax to less than 16 per cent of its adjusted net income.

The net operating loss should be defined as the excess of the deductions over the gross income, except that—

(1) The deduction for depletion should not exceed the allowance computed without regard to discovery value or to percentage depletion.

(2) There should be included in computing gross income the amount of interest received free from tax under the income tax title, decreased by the amount of interest not allowed as a deduction by section 23 (b) of the 1936 act (interest on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry certain tax-exempt obligations).

Closely Held Corporations Not Personal Holding Companies.

Recommendation No. 17.

It is recommended that a new title, to be known as Title IB, be added to the income tax law, which will impose a tax, in addition to the tax under the above recommendations, upon corporations in which stock ownership, at any time during the last half of the taxable year, exists as follows:

More than 50 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for one individual.

More than 53 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for two or less individuals.

More than 56 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for three or less individuals.

More than 59 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for four or less individuals.

More than 62 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for five or less individuals.

More than 65 per cent in value of the oustanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for six or less individuals.

More than 68 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for seven or less individuals.

More than 71 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for eight or less individuals.

More than 74 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for nine or less individuals.

More than 75 per cent in value of the outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for ten or less individuals.

In determining stock ownership the rules laid down in section 354 of the 1936 act, as amended by the revenue act of 1937, should be applied, except that the so-called "family and partnership" rule there laid down should apply only for the purpose of determining whether more than 50 per cent is owned by one individual.

It is further recommended that the corporation should be exempt from the tax if it can sustain the burden of proving to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that, although the stock ownership requirement is satisfied, neverless the individuals who are counted as owning the stock do not, legally or actually, directly or indirectly, control the corporation.

It is further recommended that the following classes of corporations be exempt from the proposed new tax:

(1) Corporations with a net income of not more than $40,000 for the taxable year.

(2) Corporations exempt under section 101 of the 1936 act.

(3) Personal holding companies as defined in Title IA of the 1936 act, as amended by the revenue act of 1937.

(4) Foreign personal holding companies as defined in Supplement P of Title I of the 1936 act, as amended by the revenue act of 1937.

(5) Banks, as defined in section 104 of the 1936 act.

(7) Insurance companies subject to the tax imposed under section 201, 204, or 207 of the 1936 act.

(8) Domestic corporations which for any portion of the taxable year are in bankruptcy under the laws of the United State, or are insolvent and in receivership in any court of the United States or of any State, Territory or the District of Columbia.

(9) Mutual investment companies, as defined in section 48 (e) of the 1936 act.

(10) Corporations organized under the China trade act, 1922.

(11) Corporations which, by reason of their deriving a large portion of their gross income from sources within a possession of the United States, are entitled to the benefits of section 251 of the 1936 act.

In the case of a corporation subject to the new title the following tax is recommended:

(1) Define "Title IB net income" to mean the net income (as computed for the purpose of Title I) minus—

(a) The credit allowed by section 26 (a) of the 1936 act, relating to interest on certain obligations of the United States and Government corporations.

(b) The tax imposed under Title I for the taxable year (exclusive of any tax under section 102), before the application of the foreign tax credit provided in section 131 of the 1936 act.

(2) Define "adjusted Title IB net income" to mean the "Title IB net income" minus $40,000, or 30 per cent of the "Title IB net income," whichever is the greater.

(3) Define "undistributed Title IB net income" to mean the "adjusted Title IB income" minus the sum of

(a) The dividends-paid credit, computed as recommended above Recommendation No. 13); and

(b) The amount, if any, by which any deficit in the accumulated earnings and profits account, as of the close of the preceding taxable year, exceeds any net operating loss (computed as recommended above (Recommendation No. 16) for such year, to the extent such excess is needed to reduce the "undistributed Title IB net income" to zero; and

(c) The amount, if any, by which the "adjusted Title IB net income" exceeds the earnings and profits of the taxable year (computed without diminution by reason of distributions during the taxable year or by reason of the tax imposed for the taxable year by the new Title IB), to the extent such excess is needed to reduce the "undistributed Title IB net income" to zero.

(4) The tax should be 20 per cent of the "undistributed Title IB net income."

It is further recommended that, as in the case of Title IA, all provisions of law (including penalties) applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by Title I, be made applicable with respect to the tax imposed by the new Title IB; but, as in the case of Title IA, the credit for foreign taxes should not be allowed.

Personal Holding Companies.

Recommendation No. 18.

It is recommended that personal holding companies taxable under Title IA be allowed, in computing their dividends-paid credit, the benefit of the dividend carry-over allowed them in computing their tax under Title I, a privilege denied them by existing law.

Recommendaion No. 19.

It is recommended that in the computation of "personal holding company income" under section 353 of the 1936 act, as amended by the Revenue Act of 1937, there be considered as "rent" the interest on debts owed to the corporation to the extent such debts represent the selling price for which real property held primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of its trade or business was sold or exchanged by the corporation.

Accumulation of Surplus to Avoid Surtax.

Recommendation No. 20.

It is recommended that the rate of tax on all corporations liable for tax under section 102 of the 1936 act (corporations accumulating surplus to avoid surtax on shareholders), be 25 per cent on the first $100,000 of the "retained net income," and 35 per cent on the remainder of the "retained net income," and that the reduced rates of 15 per cent and 25 per cent, provided in existing law in the case of corporations subject to the undistributed profits tax under the 1936 act, be not continued.

Recommendation No. 21.

It is recommended (1) that corporations taxable under section 102 compute their dividends-paid credit without the benefit of the dividend carry-over provided under existing law; (2) that they should not be allowed as a deduction, in computing "retained net income" the credit provided in section 26 (c) of the 1936 act, relating to contracts restricting dividends; (3) that they should not be allowed as a deduction, in computing "special adjusted net income," the credit provided in section 26 (e) of the 1936 act, relating to national mortgage associations, and (4) that their deduction for Federal taxes should not include the tax imposed by the new Title IB.

Recommendation No. 22.

It is recommended that a corporation liable to tax under both section 102 and the new Title IB be allowed, as a credit against the tax computed under section 102, the amount of the tax for the same taxable year imposed by the new Title IB.

CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES.

Capital Assets.

Recommendation No. 23.

It is recommended that the definition of "capital assets" found in section 117 (b) of the 1936 act be amended so as also to except property used in the trade or business, of a character which is subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 23 (l) of the 1936 act. The effect of this will be to remove such property from the percentage brackets of section 117 (a), and from the limitation on losses provided in section 117 (d), and also to remove it from the operation of Recommendation No. 26 of the subcommittee as to an alternative method of taxing long-term capital gains of an individual. It will also, in the case of a corporation, permit losses from the sale or exchange of such property to be included in the computation of the net operating loss hereinbefore recommended (Recommendation No. 16). It will also remove losses from the sale or exchange of such property, in the case of individuals, from the computation of the net capital loss carry-overs recommended (Recommendation No. 28 by the subcommittee.

Percentage of Capital Gain or Loss Taken into Account.

Recommendation No. 24.

It is recommended that the table of percentages of gain or loss from the sale or exchange of capital assets that are to be taken into account in computing net income, provided in section 117 (a) of the 1936 act, and based on the period of time the asset has been held, should be amended in accordance with the following table:

Short-Term and Long-Term Gains and Losses.

Recommendation No. 25.

It is recommended that (except in the case of a corporation) gains and losses from the sale or exchange of capital assets held for not more than one year (hereinafter caled short-term capital gains and short-term capital losses) me segregated from gains and losses where the asset has been held for more than one year (hereinafter called long-term capital gains and long-term capital losses).

Net Long-Term Capital Gains of Individuals.

Recommendation No. 26.

It is recommended that if a taxpayer (other than a corporation) has a net long-term capital gain (computed without regard to short-term capital gains or losses or deductions allocable thereto, but with the new percentage brackets recommended in Recommendation No. 24) he should be taxed by whichever of the following methods will produce the lesser tax:

(1) Add the net long-term capital gains to his ordinary net income (i. e., net income computed without any long-term capital gains or losses, or deductions allocable thereto, but computed with short-term capital gains and with short-term capital losses to the extent allowed by sec. 117 (d) as proposed to be amended in Recommendation No. 27, and with deductions properly allocable thereto) and apply the usual normal and surtax rates.

(2) Compute a tax on the ordinary net income and add thereto 40 per cent of the net long-term capital gain.

Limit on Deduction of Capital Losses.

Recommendation No. 27.

It is recommended that the present rule laid down in seotion 117 (d) of the 1936 act be retained as to corporations, but that the rule for individuals should be as follows:

(1) Short-term capital losses (losses from sale or exchange of capital assets held for not more than one year) should be allowed only to the extent of the short-term capital gains.

(2) Long-term capital losses should be allowed only to the extent of $2,000 plus the long-term capital gains.

Net Capital Loss Carry-Over.

Recommendation No. 28.

It is recommended—

(1) That an individual having in any taxable year a net short-term capital loss (net loss from the sale or exchange of capital assets held for not more than one year), be permitted to carry over such loss, in an amount not in excess of his net income for such year, to the succeeding taxable year, and apply it in such year to offset any short-term capital gains in such year not already offset by short-term capital losses in such year.

(2) That an individual having in any taxable year a net long-term capital loss (net loss from sale or exchange of capital assets held for more than one year) be permitted to carry over such loss, reduced by $2,000 (unless the ordinary net income, as defined in Recommendation No. 26 relating to net long-term capital gains, is less than $2,000, in which case reduced by the amount of the ordinary net income, or unless there is no ordinary net income, in which case not reduced), to the succeeding taxable year and apply it in such year to offset any long-term capital gains in such year not already offset by long-term capital losses in such year.

Partnerships.

Recommendation No. 29.

It is recommended that the above recommendations relating to capital gains and losses should be subject to the following modifications in the case of a partnership:

Net short-term capital gains, net short-term capital losses, net long-term capital gains and net long-term capital losses be segregated from the ordinary net income, and carried into the computation of the individual partner's income as thus segregated, to be dealt with in accordance with the policies above recommended.

Losses from Securities Becoming Worthless.

Recommendation No. 30.

It is recommended that the provisions (found in existing law or recommended in this report) relating to losses from the sale or exchange of capital assets, be made applicable to losses with respect to certain corporate securities which result from such securities becoming worthless, and which under existing law are allowable without regard to the provisions of section 117 of the 1936 act. The classes of securities with respect to which the changes should apply are:

(1) Shares of stocks in a corporation (as defined in the revenue laws);

(2) rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares; and (3) bonds, debentures, notes or certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness, issued by any corporation (including those issued by a government or political subdivision thereof), with interest coupons or in registered form. It is suggested that the recommended result can most readily be carried into effect by treating losses resulting from such securities (if they are capital assets) becoming worthless (whether now allowable under sec. 23 (e) or (f) as losses, or under sec. 23 (k) as bad debts), as losses from the sale or exchange of capital assets.

Recommendation No. 31.

It is further recommended, in connection with the above, that the deduction allowed, by section 23 (k) of the 1936 act, with respect to debts recoverable only in part, should not be allowed where the debt is evidenced by one of the classes of securities above described, if the security is a capital asset.

OTHER INCOME TAX AND ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES.

Recommendation No. 32.

It is recommended that dividends on fully paid-up insurance policies be fully included in the gross income of the recipients.

Expenses Incurred in Connection With the Collection or Production of Income.

Recommendation No. 33.

It is recommended that a deduction be permitted under section 23 of the revenue act of 1936 for expenses not attributable to the taxpayer's trade or business, but immediately and directly incurred in the collection or production of amounts included in gross income, limited to 50 per cent of the amount collected or produced.

Individuals' Deduction for Charitable Contributions Limited to Gifts to Domestic Organizations.

Recommendation No. 34.

It is recommended that the deduction for charitable contributions by individuals be limited to donations to domestic institutions.

Charitable Contribution Deductible Only in Year Paid.

Recommendation No. 35.

It is recommended that the deduction for charitable contributions provided by section 23 of the revenue act of 1936 be allowable only for the year in which

Relief Paralysis In D. C.

Many students of unemployment relief are emphasizing the importance of more local responsibility in providing aid to jobless men. The need for Federal economy is so urgent that the Government cannot be expected to create relief jobs for all breadwinners in need of assistance. It is imperative, therefore, to shift a considerable share of the increased relief burden resulting from the current slump to the States and local communities.

The desirability of a new relief policy was effectively pointed out to the Senate's Committee on Unemployment by Charles P. Taft, chairman of the National Citizens' Committee of the Community Mobilization for Human Needs. In his opinion the time has come to meet the problem realistically—to define the relative obligations of Federal and State governments and rely upon the latter to do their part. From the administrative as well as the financial viewpoint, that is a constructive approach.

Washington, like all other communities, should be ready to assume its share of this obligation. At present, however, local authorities are left helpless while the families of jobless men plead for bread. In the single month of December, the Public Assistance Division turned away 1,038 applicants for help because of its limited funds. It is estimated that 80 per cent of these would have been eligible for relief if funds had been available.

Congress, with the aid of the Federal Budget Bureau, has made it impossible for the Capital City to keep some groups of its needy residents from starvation. No local funds whatever are available for individuals capable of working, regardless of how desperate their wants may be. Such unfortunates must rely upon friends, organized private charity or some form of lawlessness. That is patently an intolerable situation.

This indefensible neglect of jobless men in Washington arises from the antiquated practice of considering the District as just another bureau in the Federal Government. With unemployment increasing, Congress seems inclined to recognize the need for expansion of local relief outlays to supplement limited national funds. But that logic has not yet been applied to the District. Local governments are expected to extend their relief activities, but the only local community controlled from Washington is denied the means to fulfill its patent obligations to humanity.

So far as is known Washington is the only large American city that has nothing to spend for relief of employables. A considerable number of even those unable to work are being turned away from the Public Assistance Division empty-handed. And the outlook will be even more gloomy if the recommendations of the Budget Bureau for the fiscal year 1939 should be approved.

Regardless of whether a new national relief policy can be evolved from the present study, Congress is under solemn obligation to permit the District to relieve the suffering of its own destitute residents.

Mr. Knudsen Explains.

Asked a few days ago by the special Senate committee investigating unemployment what factors were considered in planning for production, W. S. Knudsen, president of General Motors, replied: "Retail sales only."

Of course, that seems plain business commonsense to a practical executive. Unless people are willing to buy automobiles, or likely to begin buying them soon, it would be very poor management to keep on producing. It must have been a novel experience for Mr. Knudsen to be asked to explain why his company did not retain men either to manufacture machines for which there was no demand or else to support them in idleness, until the surplus funds of the company were exhausted. To such suggestions he could only reply that business cannot be run "on the basis of psychology or our own opinion of what is going to be good or bad."

The Senators' questions and Mr. Knudsen's answers are well worth study, as evidence of the extent of the intellectual gulf that separates the practical business executive from the political thinker who is concerned with problems of business and government. A few years ago, a Senator who questioned the right of a concern to dismiss men when there was no demand for their services would have been regarded as an ignoramus or a dangerous radical. Today, it is the questioned man, not the questioner, who is on the defensive.

Fortunately witnesses and Senatorial investigators appear to be anxious to exchange ideas in an atmosphere free from the strife and contentiousness that has so often pervaded similar hearings in the past. Effective co-operation between representatives of business and government in solving the difficult employment problems of today requires not merely an intellectual but a sympathetic understanding of the mental processes and the practical philosophy of the "other fellow."

Toward Anglo-Irish Amity.

The meeting to be held in London Monday, with the premiers of Great Britain and Ireland in attendance, gives promise of leading to a comprehensive and friendly settlement of the problems still disturbing Anglo-Irish relations. Such a settlement would be to the very real advantage of both nations.

Much water has passed under the bridge since 1921, when the Anglo-Irish treaty was signed. That pact was a great turning point in the relations of the two countries. On the part of Britain it marked the final abandonment of century-old efforts to coerce Ireland into remaining an integral part of the United Kingdom. By the same token it gave the 26 southern and northwestern counties of Ireland the substance of independence.

Since then nearly all the treaty provisions which seemed to limit the Free State's sovereignty have been whittled away. The culmination of this process was manifested recently in the promulgation by the Dublin government, with the consent of the people, of a new constitution in which, among other changes, the Free State was renamed the State of Eire, or Ireland.

However much individual Englishmen deplored the gradual severance by the Free State of the ties once binding that nation to Great Britain, there were no official protests by the British government—except in one instance. When the Free State government suspended land repurchase payments to Great Britain, the latter imposed punitive tariffs on Free State products. The Free State retaliated in kind and, since 1932, a trade war has raged between the two countries. But at no time since 1921 has Great Britain shown any disposition to revert to the status obtaining before that date. So far as the British government and people are concerned the independence of Ireland is an irrevocable fact.

In only three particulars has Ireland continued to be linked to Great Britain. First, the British government continues to maintain naval bases at three points on the Irish coast as she has a right to do under the 1921 treaty. Secondly, Ireland is still Britain's co-partner, on terms of full equality, in the British Commonwealth of Nations. And, last but not least, the bridge uniting Eire and Britain, namely, Ulster, insists on remaining British. The forthcoming election in Northern Ireland is, in fact, intended to prove that point to the hilt.

Given a disposition by Eire to meet British wishes halfway, Great Britain is not likely to oppose too strenuously any Irish demand for the abandonment of the existing British naval bases since their value has largely disappeared anyway, with the development of air warfare. But in return Premier de Valera might agree to sign a treaty pledging Eire not to enter any combination directed against her eastern neighbor or permit her harbors to be used as bases by Britain's enemies. If Ireland is a factor in Britain's security problem, the reverse holds equally true.

As for the land purchase obligations owed Great Britain and the ruinous tariff war, the indications are that both sides are sick and tired of the mess and would like to see it wiped out. Great Britain is Ireland's most important customer. On the other hand, the heavy duties imposed on Irish products by the British government, while body blows to Irish farmers, have done British consumers of Irish pork and bacon no good either.

The most hopeful aspect of the London meeting is that the Irish, now convinced that their independence is a fact, are inclined to take into account the realities of their situation as a close neighbor of Great Britain and the unquestioned advantages of amicable relations with that country. Great Britain, too, seems prepared to let bygones be bygones. With the violent differences that once divided them now water under the bridge, the many points at which their interests coincide are more clearly appreciated.

Scientific Child Care.

Dr. C. C. Carstens' report on the care of Washington's neglected and delinquent children is an interesting example of the progress that is being made in dealing with sociological problems. Too often in the past social welfare has been subject to the process of "muddling through." That tendency undoubtedly accounts for disappointing results in many cases. But today the trend is toward scientific analysis before corrective measures are undertaken.

With a grant from the Washington Committee of the Child Welfare League of America, the entire problem of child welfare in the District has been studied. And Dr. Carstens, executive director of the league, has brought together in his report an elaborate set of recommendations which, if adopted, will give Washington a model program for the care of unfortunate children. Local agencies interested in child welfare now have an objective that is worthy of their best efforts.

Dr. Carstens urges the construction of a small children's receiving home; a 50 per cent increase in the staff of the Child Welfare Division of the Board of Public Welfare; more extensive care of children by private agencies use of foster homes for some children now institutionalized; provision of adequate relief for indigent families to avoid breaking up homes, and various related improvements in the existing methods of caring for dependent children. No panacea is offered. But the report is replete with practical suggestions growing out of actual experience in this field.

Such an excellent piece of work raises hope that the agencies dealing with child welfare in the District will be as successful in applying this advice as they were in securing the diagnosis.

To Prime Or Not To Prime.

Secretary Wallace and Secretary Morgenthau evidently do not agree about the value of pump-priming as a means of reviving business under present conditions.

That the Secretary of the Treasury places no faith in lavish spending by the Government as a cure for depression is shown by his plea for retrenchment to balance the budget, as an alternative to increasing the tax burden. His persistent emphasis upon the importance of budgetary balance and advocacy of definite economies in agricultural relief, road funds, CCC camps and other emergency outlays definitely align Mr. Morgenthau alongside those who think sound fiscal policies are better recovery measures than pump-priming.

Secretary Wallace, on the other hand, still shows a chastened fondness for the pump-priming technique. In his position, he could hardly feel otherwise. It is to him that the farm population looks for the subsidies they have come to expect from the Government. However, Mr. Wallace appears to be increasingly aware of the dangers resulting from the substitution of public for private credit under the pump-priming system. Although he says that the Government is still under an obligation to "complement" private capital by spending public funds, particularly through Federal lending agencies, he is plainly apprehensive of excessive lending.

One of the most significant aspects of Mr. Wallace's qualified defense of pump-priming is his recognition of its serious limitations and his emphasis upon private borrowing and lending as a means of financing industrial expansion. As Mr. Wallace says, "When private credit is used in ways that do not prove to pay, it is possible to wipe out the whole transaction by means of bankruptcy proceedings." But, unfortunately, when public debts are incurred for non-productive purposes, they remain indefinitely as a burden to be borne by taxpayers.

It is also worth noting that the Secretary of Agriculture stresses the necessity of maintaining credit, whether public or private, on a self-liquidating basis, with restrictions upon the rate of debt expansion. He cites the overexpansion of the '20's as a warning against another period of unduly rapid debt accumulation with its aftermath of recession.

The chief weakness of his rather ingenious argument on behalf of continued pump-priming is that he assumes the reluctance of private capital to resume its so-called "normal functions" is primarily due to recollections of the painful consequences of past excesses. This convenient theory makes it possible to ignore the effect of the Administration's fiscal, regulatory and pump-priming activities upon investment sentiment. The major cause of investment timidity and hesitancy of business to embark on new ventures is the uncertain outlook created by a still-unbalanced budget and the increasing difficulty of gauging the profitability of new enterprises, in face of threatened Government competition and restraints.

Secretary Morgenthau recently told a House sub-committee on appropriations that getting money was the least of his worries. If private investment activities were not discouraged by various paralyzing uncertainties, there would likewise be no need to worry about capital assuming the normal risks incidental to business expansion. And, in that event, Secretary Wallace would have to find another excuse for budget-wrecking subsidies.

Beard Goes Back.

Superintendent Huff of the District's penal institutions is entitled to the congratulations of the public for the prompt reversal of his judgment on the incarceration of Sam Beard at the Lorton Reformatory. A less intelligent public servant might have clung to his first decision. But Mr. Huff has recognized the compelling arguments against Beard's transfer to the vicinity of his former lawless operations and requested Attorney General Cummings to return the prisoner to Atlanta.

The Department of Justice's quick compliance with that request was a foregone conclusion. It is said to have been the District Attorney's office which first requested that the notorious Washington gambler be incarcerated a safe distance from the scene of his former crimes. The local prosecuting agency will doubtless be relieved to know that Beard can exercise no influence upon the gambling racket here during the remainder of his term.

As matters stand, the Beard incident may actually redound to the benefit of law enforcement in Washington. In the future local authorities are certain to scrutinize with much greater care the lists of prisoners suggested for transfer to Lorton.

Useless Horn-Blowing.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A plague on motorcar drivers who blow horns insistently, stridently, resoundingly, with unbridled glee and frisky abandon upon all and every occasion; who bull their way at high speed past marked car zones.

A plague on drivers who explode horns as a compromise for inept handling; in lieu of a doorbell; to greet old friends or fellow spirits—especially the alcoholic; to blast the aged, timid or hesitating out their shoes and equanimity; to pass at 40 per; to weave, and to boost the line ahead that arrival at some unimportant destination may be assured nine seconds sooner; to scare poor mutts (that they have to stop for anyhow, else grind to pulp) into frigidity; to evidence their dumbness or give proof of latent savagery; to express exuberance; to prove they smoke the wrong brand.

A plague, doubled, redoubled and quadrupled, on horn blowers everywhere who bray their horns instead of straining the few brains nature (if it did) inadvertently endow them with; or who bleat horns idiotically in "quiet" residence sections where others have retired but the blowers have not.

A little sensible restraint such as our horse-and-buggy ancestors had—a check rein on their nervous, jumpy spirits—would override nobody's rights, including the sappy, the incredibly dumb and entirely selfish horn blowers.

It is cheering to note the "advisers" are out to restrain this boob, who has made Washington lead the world in useless horn-blowing.

Schools, Not Memorials.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Two news items in The Post of January 13 appear to be quite opportune: first, the abandonment of the project for a George Washington Memorial Auditorium, upon which preliminary construction work began in 1921; secondly, a proposition for a "Cheaper Memorial to Jefferson," initiated by President Roosevelt.

The first of these memorial projects was started many years ago by popular subscriptions, somewhat similar to that for the Washington Monument. The other came through recent Congressional appropriation of $10,000,000.

In this extravagance the Congress and the President overlooked, first, the fact that the large personal library of Thomas Jefferson, purchased by Congress in 1815, 11 years prior to his death, constituted the very nucleus of the Congressional Library; secondly, the further fact that the monumental golden-domed edifice on Capitol Hill, in itself, is an everlasting memorial to Thomas Jefferson, which would not be surpassed by any other device.

The crying need of the District of Columbia at this time is more and better school facilities. When prosperity returns, the matter of additional memorials can be given proper attention.

Cold Remedy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post has recently published several articles on colds. I have been surprised that they contained no mention of a type of remedy I supposed had become widely known and recognized. I refer to the use of common baking soda.

Colds, many have learned, are associated with an acid condition. It has even been said that pneumonia will not occur where the stomach is right. When one feels the cold coming on, the soda is taken in doses of half a teaspoonful, more or less, in a little water, about every two hours, and diminished as the symptoms lessen. Fruit juice or lemon juice with salt are often interspersed.

The Item Veto.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Woodrum amendment, referred to in your editorial of January 13, empowering the President to veto items of a bill without having to veto the entire bill is unquestionably unconstitutional and manifestly so from a most casual reading of Section 7, Article 1, of the Constitution.

That such a power can be conferred only by amendment of the Constitution has been the accepted view ever since the Constitution was adopted. Among the ablest men our country ever produced were those who drafted the Constitution of the Confederate States, and such was their view as they incorporated such a provision in that instrument, which was a redraft and adaptation of the Constitution of the United States. The undersigned has advocated such an amendment to the Constitution for years in the public press.

It is the absence of such a provision that encouraged "pork-barrel" legislation, and the unjustified expenditure of public funds, by tacking vicious and unmeritorious riders on a general appropriation bills and thereby compelling the President to approve them or suspend the operations of Government by vetoing the entire bill.

ALEXANDER S. LANIER.

'Moral Integrity.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In commenting on the recent Jackson Day dinner here, Mr. Waltman of The Post, emphasized the repeated use by the principal speaker of the duty of maintaining and upholding "the moral integrity of democracy."

Mr. Waltman, who has as good an intellect as any columnist in the land, did not attempt to unravel the meaning of the speaker. The question that occurred to many persons was: Did it have any more real meaning than the use of "Never more" by Poe's raven.

The "moral integrity of democracy" is a compound of two abstract ideas: There would be no agreement even among the intelligentsia as to what the phrase meant; it is not susceptible of analysis. It seems to a layman that it would be equally lucid to speak of the moral integrity of molasses. How democracy, per se, can have an "integrity" any more than Mohammedanism is not apparent. It does, however, have a euphonious sound over the radio.

Old Bill Allen, of Ohio, ("Rise Up, William") prominent statesman of a former generation, used to demolish his foes by condemning their assertions as "damned barren idealities" and his shibboleth got a tremendous hand from his Democratic followers. It was indeed a barren ideality that Woodrow Wilson cherished when he announced the plan of making the "world safe for democracy." E. B. SMITH.

"Use Trash Containers."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Beautiful Washington! Why not keep it that way? For the National Capital of the best country in the world our city is a disgrace.

Papers, bottle and debris are thrown all over the city, in spite of the fact that there are numerous trash containers at corners.

If each one would do his bit, to stop and think before throwing newspapers and the like on the streets, Washington would be a more likely place in which to live.

The Siren Plan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This letter is written in reference to the article in The Post of January 12, in which it is stated that in connection with a traffic safety drive, all fatal accidents will be broadcast over the radio, including details.

It is understood that the announcement of the accidents will be preceded by the scream of a siren to attract attention to "the theme song of death."

Heaven help the children of this fair city if this ridiculous scheme is put in effect. Must our homes be invaded by gruesome accounts of all fatal motor car accidents? If so, any honest psychiatrist will agree that the action contemplated will do more harm than good.

At the present time there are far too many children who are nervous wrecks, due to the false standards of living, the tempo of the times and the harmful, exciting, overstimulating movies and radio programs for children.

To have a gruesome detailed account broadcast of all fatal traffic accidents is the last straw. There must be some better way to handle the deplorable traffic problem.

LESTER H. REESE.
Washington, Jan. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The column headed "Sirens to Tell D. C. of Every Traffic Death," in The Post of January 12, impels a query: Will the accounts planned for distribution via newspaper and radio of traffic deaths mention faithfully every instance where booze figures in the case? One cannot help but be struck with the fact that turning over the page, the article runs alongside a large display advertisement of whisky.

In the repeal of prohibition the country apparently decided for liquor; now it's up to us to accept the consequences, and face the simple fact that we have got to accept traffic toll, and that all the noise we make, including publicity, hard boiled cops, etc., is going to make very little difference so long as the fundamental cause of traffic accidents remains.

Such advertisements effectively offset safety-first campaigns as fast as they are staged.

Fingerprints On Checks?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Tom McCarthy on January 13 quotes an accomplished check forger as saying, "Putting the check-pushers in prison won't break the racket."

That's right. It won't. But if the public ever loses its phobia that the fingerprint is the stigma of criminality, perhaps our own civilization could help "break the racket" by the simple expedient of having the depositor's fingerprint accompany his signature on his check.

Of course, this procedure would not entirely remove the evils of check forgery, but it would certainly reduce its prevalence as a racket.

No Greens Control.

In the name of every lover of real Southern cooking, we hasten to support the objection of Senator Bilbo, of Mississippi, to any plan that would bring turnip salad and mustard greens under the operation of the farm bill.

There is nothing about greens that in any way suggests a surplus. Who, for instance, having once acquired the habit of feasting on greens, hog jowl and pone bread, ever thought that there could be a surplus of it? And with the hog-killing season upon us! What more inopportune time could be chosen for such a suggestion?

Interlude At The Zoo.

SOON after Christmas my wife decided to clean house. She told me about it one morning at breakfast.

"If I were you," she said, "I would take a book and go over in the park and read. You'll only be in the way around here."

It was one of those bright, spring-like mornings that followed Christmas this year, and I didn't want to go over in the park and read. And I didn't want my wife to clean house.

"It's such a nice day," I said. "Why don't you come with me and we'll go for a long ride, or walk in the woods."

But her mind was made up. So I went to the park.

* * *

I wandered along the walkways, alone, and now and then I stopped and watched the animals basking in the warm sun.

Finally, I found an unoccupied bench near the bear cage and I sat down and opened my book. But, try as I might, I couldn't bring myself to just sit there and read.

So, after a while, I closed the book and watched the bears instead. They were fat, lazy bears and they didn't move very much. But it was better than reading a book.

I sat there feeling lonely and wishing I had someone to talk to, and just then a little boy came along.

He wasn't a particularly clean little boy, nor especially handsome, but I was glad he sat down on my bench.

The little boy, though, didn't say anything, and the frown on his face discouraged advances. So I remained silent, too, and studied the little boy on the bench.

He was, I believe, about 5 years old, and he was wearing an Indian suit. But he wasn't an old-fashioned Indian because strapped around his waist was a holster in which were two mean-looking guns.

* * *

He sat there somberly staring at the bears in their cage. Finally, I worked up the courage to speak.

"That is a fine Indian suit," I said. "Did Santa bring it to you?"

The little boy looked at me, icily. I believe it was the first time he had noticed me sitting there.

"Ain't no Santa Claus," he said. "My pop bought this suit."

I felt that I had been put in my place.

I didn't speak for a time after that. But, finally, I got tired of the silence, and I decided to risk it again.

"Nice guns you've got there," I ventured. "How do they shoot?"

This time my young friend was truly annoyed.

"Ain't real guns," he snapped.

He must have been seething inside, because he leaned down and picked up an innocent twig and began snapping it off in small pieces.

His expression was fierce. If I hadn't been desperate I wouldn't have spoken again. But I couldn't stand it, just sitting there quietly.

"What do you think of these bears?" I asked, finally. "They're big ones, aren't they?"

The little boy looked as though the burdens of the world weighed heavily on his slim shoulders. He studied the bears a few minutes longer, the expression on his face never changing. Then he said:

"Ain't so big."

I gave up. The little boy, I felt, definitely did not want to talk. He sat there snapping his twig. I opened my book again and tried to read.

* * *

But suddenly the little boy spoke again, voluntarily.

"Lazy, too," he said. He meant the bears.

I was overjoyed. At last, I felt, my friend was unbending. I closed the book again, hurriedly, and turned back to the lad sitting beside me.

"Yes, they are," I agreed. "Fat and lazy."

The little boy nodded.

But the conversation subsided again. I searched my mind desperately for something else to say. I felt that if I didn't think of something the little boy might go away.

At last a thought came to me. It was, I felt, an inspiration.

I smiled at the little boy. "How would you like to feed the bears?" I asked.

But the idea did not impress my Indian friend.

"Can't" he said. "Ain't got no peanuts."

"But you could buy some," I said.

"Ain't got no money," he said.

I reached in my pocket and took out a nickel.

"Here," I said. "Take this and go over to that stand over there and buy some peanuts with it."

The little boy didn't smile. He just took the nickel and went away toward the stand.

But while he was gone my thoughts were most pleasant. How easy it was, I was thinking, to buy happiness. In a few minutes the little boy would come back with the peanuts and he would feed the bears and it would be fun and he wouldn't frown any more.

I could picture the little boy's serious face wreathed in smiles and I was so busy thinking of how he would look that I did not notice he had returned till he tugged at my sleeve.

Then, when I looked down, he was not smiling. His face was sadder than ever as he put the nickel back in my hand.

Night Out.

I WAS GOING to write some aggressive remarks about Communists and the C. I. O., but I think there might be much more interest in a straightaway account of a night out in New York.

PEGLER.

Well, the War Department had been complaining that she never saw any shows any more and might as well be living in Grand Island or Billings, when down popped a pair for the opening of "Tortilla Flat." So we went and felt sorry for all concerned in the play, because, after all their effort and expense, it is just a pop fly and you could see in the faces of the actors that they were not deceived by the kind applause.

So after that we decided to go to the Stork Club and agreed that it was to be for just one. Sherman Billingsley got us a nice table and sat down for a minute.

I asked him if old Bleeding Heart Broun had been in, and he said, "No; not tonight," and I said I guessed the fat Mahatma probably had a chalkmark on his door these days on account of Sherman's trouble with some union waiters. Sherman said no, he was in good standing with Broun, because the case is before the Labor Relations Board. The band was squawking away. A lot of Cuban or South American god-awfuls, one right after another, and the customers were out on the little floor circling and staring at one another in those Latin-American dances, like pit cocks sparring to strike.

• • • •

KATHARINE BRUSH came in with a big guy named Hulbert, a Saturday Evening Post guy, and it turned out they had been at "Tortilla Flat," too, and thought about the same as we did.

Then, after a while, who comes ambling over but Broun with Connie, and they sit down, and I get to thinking how cockeyed this is for us to be dramming together when it is only a few hours since I took a belt at him in print in retaliation for a clout that he took at me a couple of days before. I suppose he is thinking the same thing. I know he hates my tripes politically, and I know it is mutual if not more so, but we never talk about such things, and I guess we are pretty good friends out of print. But, hell, I didn't start it. I was just running my peanut stand and minding my own business when he started yelling "Pegler sells lousy peanuts!" What am I supposed to do? Boost his peanuts?

Billingsley remarked that Winchell was in the place, and I thought I would go and say hello, and he started talking about my income tax stories and did the revenue people ever bear down on me in revenge? I said no, my tossing around occurred before I started. That was how I happened to learn about this business of an agent walking in and acting like a prohibition agent in an old-time speak and about their opportunities to compromise cases for graft.

THEN A little bloke sat down and said, "Hey, do you know a guy named Seltzer, the editor of the Cleveland Press?" It was Leonard Lyons, the Broadway columnist. "Because how about this? He cancels me out of his paper because he has got too much Broadway coverage and he keeps McIntyre!"

Well, that is kind of funny, because this little Lyons hustles ten big clubs and saloons every night, with a notebook, and, honestly, McIntyre still thinks Thirty-fourth street is 'way uptown.

Lyons never drinks, not even coffee, and he tells how when he gets home at 6 a. m. and says "Good night" the elevator man thinks he is drunk and how his baby is just waking up when he gets in and just being put down when he starts back to work at 4 in the afternoon—the gay life of a Broadway bon vivant.

Betty Lawford, the girl who takes the bath in "The Women," is there, and five cute little dolls—society, I suppose you could call them—surround a table for a thing I never heard of before—a girl's bachelor supper. One is getting married, and the others are going to be her handlers. This is her party for them. No blokes—all dolls.

The old Mahatma suggests that the orchestra play, "The Internationale," but it only plays some more Cuban. Billingsley sits over in a corner counting up, for it is now 4 a. m. and the War Department is jerking nods toward the door and wishing by this time that—no kidding—she did live in Grand Island or Billings.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Abdul Wahab Rules the Waves.

(London.—Radio rivalry between the British and Italian governments for prestige in the Near and Middle East has reached disturbing heights. Alarmed by the popularity of Abdul Wahab, "the Bing Crosby of the Near East," whose crooning from powerful Italian stations is delighting the Arabs of Palestine, the British are broadcasting by short wave their jazziest programs, but without much success.—News item.)

I.
There's a crisis with your breakfast,
There's a crisis with your lunch;
All the world is tense and jumpy
As its chin takes each new punch;
Now the British face a new one—
As a certain Abdul Wahab
Leaps into the "mike" and croons.

II.
Mussolini—he's behind it,
And he holds the Arab ear
With a mighty Roman station
And no opposition near;
Tense the air is through the Near East,
Where a crooner is no pest—
And the voice of Abdul Wahab
Seems to soothe the Arab breast.

III.
All day long the British struggle
With diplomacy and skill
To hold onto Arab friendship
And establish their good will,
But with nightfall comes undoing,
Disappointment and despair,
As the Arab cry goes ringing,
"Abdul Wahab's on the air!"

IV.
Arab hearts go pitter-patter,
Arab eyes they snap and roll
When young Wahab—such a crooner!—
Stirs the sternest Arab soul;
With a jeer, they ask this question:
"England master, chief and boss? . . .
Then why can't she get a crooner

V.
"How are things?" John Bull inquires
Of the commandant in power;
"They'd be okay," is his answer,
"But for Abdul Wahab's hour!"
England bravely meets the issue
With a broadcast full of jazz—
But it lacks that certain something
That this Abdul Wahab has.

VI.
Britain volleys with her tenors,
And her quartets, eight or nine;
"Forward!" cries she to her bandmen
As her songsters hit the line,
But the victory she loses—
Vain her call to Do or Die!—
For she has no air-wave crooner
Like this Abdul Wahab guy!

England On Spain

Fear Of "Red" Neighbor Explains Much Of Britain's Unsureness In Directing Non-Intervention Policy.

By Lawrence A. Fernsworth.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

NON-INTERVENTION in Spain was proposed by France on August 2, accepted by Britain on August 4, by Russia on August 5 and, on August 7, 8, and 9, by Italy, Germany and Portugal in the order named. But the violations of non-intervention by Italy and Germany and the connivance therein by Portugal soon became evident. The Spanish government's position is that non-intervention should never have been proposed, since it really constituted intervention, in that it denied to a friendly government the right to defend itself from internal aggression, and so in effect operated to aid those who had risen in rebellion against a legitimate government.

The critics of the British government point out that nonintervention merely placed Italy and Germany in a most favored position for aiding Franco inasmuch as it allowed their warships to "control" the government coastline, where in fact they merely established an intelligence service for Franco and even went so far as to send their planes to bomb Spanish towns, as to attack and seize Spanish ships and as to shell Spanish ports. Worst of all were the shipments of men and war materials which they were able to make, sometimes under cover of "control," and sometimes in spite of it. The critics therefore contend that it was Britain's duty to hold the parties to the nonintervention agreement to their word by the use of her navy if necessary.

French Criticism Ignores Dilemma Of Downing Street.

AN EMINENT French writer affirms that England could easily have put a stop to these violations by the simple procedure of blockading the ports held by Franco, and that in the face of such action Italy and Germany would have backed down.

Probably so. But this kind of criticism is based upon the assumption that the British government was particularly anxious to have those countries back down at that time. Had they done so there would have been created a situation distinctly favorable for the Republican government. The dilemma which responsible men in the British government faced seems to have been this: Was it preferable that a situation favorable to a "red" government be created, or that the aggressions of Italy and Germany be tolerated in the hope that at the proper moment they could be offset?

My judgment is that they decided in favor of the latter course. For the truth seems to be that members of the government were almost panic-stricken by the fear of a "red" government so near to their door as Spain. This was something which, in British eyes, constituted all too immediate a menace to their social and economic system, and which was as much to be avoided as the domination of the other side of their channel by Germany.

"Avoid a red Spain at all costs" was most certainly the countersign which explains a great deal in the vagaries of the British attitude.

Riots Early In Civil War Caused Britain Real Alarm.

IN THE FIRST months of the war the situation was truly alarming. Mobs which had got out of hand burned churches, were confiscating property, were killing, were proclaiming various brands of revolutionary regime. But what the British government apparently did not see, or else, the fact as to which it was improperly informed, were the Herculean efforts of responsible men in the Spanish government to save the situation, to hold the mobs in check, to establish law and order, to form a disciplined army.

This it has now accomplished. The Anarchists, who were never of the Popular Front, have long been ousted from the government; the Communists are being kept in their proper place and show no signs of jumping over the traces. A great stride forward has been made toward preserving the Republican constitutional government, which is desired at all costs.

Somehow or other Franco and his clever personal contact agents in London got over the idea in the right places that Franco was the exponent of law and order, the defender of property, while the Spanish government was the very antithesis thereof. They put across the idea that the Spanish government was "a mob," and the idea has stuck. Their own atrocious killings were either hid from the light or lied out of existence.

If ever there were proved atrocities, of such kind were the bull ring assacre of Badajoz, as this writer's own independent investigations demonstrate, and the bombing of Guernica. Yet by a clever propaganda organization they have been able to get across the idea that these things never were. The goernment's own propaganda organization, which has been widely described as a "well-oiled Moscow machine," was merely clumsy and ineffective. The great mass of material turned out at Valencia every day seemed to this writer as just so much paper thrown down a well.

The handling of foreign press correspondents was and remains most inept. Far from being pampered, as has been stated, they were frequently given inconsiderate treatment and even obstructed and antagonized. The fact that many of them, notwithstanding, continued to take a view entirely favorable to the government was due to their own integrity, to their regard for the truth as they saw it, and not out of any spirit of gratitude for favors which were never received. The best that can be said of the government's treatment of correspondents is that they were not man-handled or thrown into prison or expelled, as so frequently occurred on the rebel side.

The Spanish government propaganda and press control, therefore, were entirely ineffective in nullifying the propaganda of the Franco agents in London to the effect that the government side was a red, bloody mob.

"Fascist Tendency" Called Natural Affinity Of Leaders.

INSOFAR as a "Fascist tendency" may exist in the British cabinet, as has been charged, it is probably merely a certain sense of affinity for all political leaders and rulers who, rightly or wrongly, are considered to represent property and order as against the "red" menace. In England one frequently hears the remark on the part of persons of substance that they are for Franco because he stands for the defense of property.

The statement that part of the plan of the British government has been to drag out the civil war until both parties could be worn out, and also Franco's allies, Italy and Germany, probably has a basis of truth as a secondary consideration. It seems to have been felt that a conciliation could thereafter be effected. Conciliation seems to be further away than ever, and even Britain is wearied of the war and would like to see it ended. One feels that insofar as it took the position here described, it was indulging in an adventure, rather than facing the realities.

Another adventure would seem to be its tie-up to the idea that even if Franco won with the aid of Italy and Germany it would be easy to get them out of Spain and deal with Franco, because the Spaniard has never permitted the foreigner to remain in Spain, in any case. If this corresponded to the simple historical truth, it would still be an adventuresome theory, for conditions have changed since the days of those other invasions. But the fact is that the foreigner has never been driven out of Spain, except by other foreigners. It was Wellington who drove out the last invaders. And Gibraltar stands as a rather solid witness to the fact that sometimes the foreigner is never driven out.

New Vision In London Perhaps Gained Too Late.

BY THIS TIME British governmental circles are perhaps convinced that the republican regime is not the type of Red regime that it needs to fear. But if so, one wonders whether the conviction has not come too late for the republican regime to profit thereby. For some time it has been apparent that the British government was trying to play the winning horse. And although at this writing the government forces are making an energetic show against Franco, it is a question whether they can turn the tide sufficiently in their favor to convince sectors of British opinion, that count in such matters, that the winning horse does not continue to be Franco.

Franco, meanwhile, has been making a show of friendliness toward England, notwithstanding his continuing league with her most bitter enemies. Governmental circles in London seem impressed, seem to think that, after all, they can wean Franco away from his allies. One wonders whether here, as in the other instances cited, these circles are not losing contact with the realities, are not again embarking upon an adventure.

The Mathematics Of French Politics.

THE FALL of the Chautemps government in France has a twofold significance. In the first place, it signalizes the failure of a moderate Popular Front government to solve France's extremely difficult financial and economic problem, even as the more radical regime of Leon Blum had failed to do. And, secondly, it marks the first really serious split in the Popular Front since the electoral victory of May, 1936, which swept that coalition into power.

Almost from the moment of its creation the Popular Front, a combination of left-wing parties including the Radical Socialists (whose name is belied by the fact that they are neither radical nor socialistic), the orthodox Socialists and the Communists, has been beset by internal divisions. This was both natural and inevitable. Differences of opinion are to be expected in a democracy, even among partners in a political enterprise. And in joining the Popular Front the various parties only agreed to shelve but not to abandon their special points of view and programs.

WHAT HELD THE three parties together were two forces, one negative and the other positive.

The positive factor was the program of social reform to which Radicals, Socialists and Communists found it possible to subscribe. This included such measures as the 40-hour week, vacations with pay for workers in industry, the nationalization of the munitions industry, the right of collective bargaining, reform of the Bank of France, so as to destroy the hold hitherto maintained on that important institution by the "200 families," and so on. To a very large extent this program was carried out by the Blum government, although since then modified in certain particulars by Blum's successor.

But this common program of positive action in the field of social legislation might never have brought all the left-wing parties together or kept them together if it had not been for another factor of tremendous emotional appeal. However divided the French left may be on many questions, it is united in support of the republic and of democracy in France. And with so much of Europe now Fascist, the possibility that France, too, might take the totalitarian road has not been ignored.

On the contrary, the bloody events of February 6, 1934, the rise of Col. de la Rocque's Croix de Feu and of other Fascist and near-Fascist groups have made it clear to many Frenchmen that the democratic republic had many enemies in France. It was, it seemed to the left parties, necessary for all lovers of the republic and of freedom to pool their strength in defense of both if they were to be saved.

• • • •

IN SO FAR as the menace from the Croix de Feu, the Cagoulards (Hooded Ones) and other anti-republican elements has during recent months shown signs of disappearing, the initial impulse that led to the formation of the Popular Front has tended to wane. But should the specter of fascism once more raise its head in France, it is certain that all internal differences in the Popular Front would rapidly vanish.

For the time being, however, the danger which certain elements in that combination, particularly the Socialists and Communists, most fear is not that France will go Fascist but that the gains made as a result of the Popular Front's victory at the polls will be destroyed. On the other hand, in the face of France's acute financial and economic difficulties the Radical-Socialists have insisted that certain of the laws put through in the heyday of the Blum government should be modified or scrapped. During recent months certain steps in that direction have been taken. But this very circumstance has only tended to increase friction within the Popular Front. In the meantime the rise in the cost of living, by offsetting the wages increases of the last two years, has led to a new epidemic of strikes whose incidence and nature have further tended to widen the cleavage between the three Popular Front parties.

• • • •

ON THURSDAY an open break occurred in the government and Premier Chautemps resigned. Who his successor will be is not yet clear. It is rarely the first man who is named to form a new cabinet who succeeds in doing so. But, in any case, the chances are very great that the new French government will rest on substantially the same base as that of its predecessor. In other words, a new Popular Front government is indicated.

The reason for this is purely mathematical. There are 618 seats in the Chamber. A government to survive must have the approval and support of at least 310 deputies.

Now the strength of the Popular Front parties is as follows: Socialists, 147; Radical Socialists, 110; Communists, 72. In other words, these three parties between them command 19 more votes than a bare majority, although the policies both of M. Blum and M. Chautemps were usually approved by many more than that. In addition to these three parties, the smaller left parties, such as the Socialist and Republican Union with 29 votes, the Proletarian Unity Party with 6 and other small groups of leftists, have usually sided with the government as have many moderates, unaffiliated with the Popular Front.

The rest of the Chamber is split up between a moderate and a reactionary wing dominated, in one case, by former Premier Flandin, chief of the democratic left, which has 34 votes, and in the other by the Republican Federation, which has 49.

• • • •

THEORETICALLY, any one of four majority combinations is possible. Once again, as in 1926 when the franc as now was under sharp attack, all the parties except the Socialists and Communists might join forces in a government of national union. Such a possibility cannot entirely be ruled out, but an effort to create such a government would be certain to meet with the strong opposition of a large number of Radical Socialists, without whose support no such government could be formed.

The second possibility is a combination of the moderate parties of the center—the Radical Socialists and the Socialists. This the Radicals might favor. But the Socialists oppose such a plan, which has been suggested from time to time during recent months, as one way of ending the government's dependence on the Communists. The Socialist leaders fear that their entrance into such a regime would split their party in two and they are probably right. Their objections might diminish, however, if without joining the government, the center groups would agree to give a Socialist-Radical Socialist regime their tacit support.

But all political calculations in France always return to the reality of the fact that, unstable as it may be, a Popular Front combination on the old lines is likely to be less unstable than any other possible coalition. There is every reason to believe, therefore, that strong and possibly successful efforts will now be made to establish a new Popular Front government. But even if that should prove to be the case, the fact is now apparent that the honeymoon period of the Popular Front is now distinctly in the past.

Films That Move

By J. P. McEvoy

World Prefers American Movies.

THE FRENCH prefer American movies and so do the Germans and the English, and so do the Japanese and the Chinese. Why? Well, I have a theory that it is the American tempo.

Our moving pictures move. Something is always happening on the screen. I have seen American movies all over the world; often I have been the only one in the audience who could understand what was being said on the screen. Sometimes I even understood what they were doing. But all around me the Japanese or Chinese or the Javanese or the Arabs were having a good time watching the moving pictures move.

• • • •

THE JAPANESE make plenty of pictures themselves. More than we make, believe it or not. They are mostly blood and thunder, with a lot of sword fighting. But the Japanese movie public prefer Shirley Temple. Shirley is the sweetheart of the world. All the kids are crazy about her. Grownups too. It's quite an experience to hear a lot of Japanese or Chinese or Filipinos or Javanese laughing and applauding Shirley's antics and sniffling over her woes.

• • • •

The Chinese like our musicals. They went crazy about "Broadway Melody," even though they didn't have the foggiest notion of what it was all about. They liked the dancing and the music. I doubt if we will be so kind to Chinese musicals, if they ever get over here.

The Chinese like our comics, too. But not all of them. They love Laurel and Hardy, but they cannot understand the Marx Brothers. Who does?

Tom McCarthy

Subtlety With Sock-o!

IF YOU don't find the Loch Ness monster tying up traffic on F street in the next week or ten days, you can blame George Abbott. If the local police aren't called out to put down a riot of Siamese twins, in front of the Capital's last legitimate theater you can charge that to Mr. Abbott, too.

McCARTHY.

Now, Mr. Abbott is the producer of "Room Service," the Broadway hit which arrives at the National Theater in a matter of about ten days. And he has the—well, he has Joe Flynn.

"Flynn's the name," Joe told me. "Flynn with a double n. But my hands are tied. I'm handcuffed. I'm inhibited. They want dignity.

"Dignity, hell," he said. "What I rassle up is subtlety with sock-o! But George Abbott wants dignity. So I got to publicize 'Room Service,' with circumspection. And in regards to 'circumspection,' I'll use it, but you'll have to spell it . . . if you give direct quotes."

And then Mr. Flynn, mooning over a long amber drink at Dick's Grill, on E street, turned away to mutter about his hands being tied.

• • • •

"IT WAS that incident in Boston that soured Mr. Abbott just a bit," he said. "But it was all for the good of the show.

"I invented a new con game to be played on the man at the box-office of our theater. And after it went through it made every paper in Boston and went out on the wires.

"The box-office cashier complained to police that he'd been stuck by a new racket. Someone came in and asked for $20 in quarters. Then the party threw back one paper roll of quarters and said 'Nope, make it halves.' But when the man at the box-office checked the roll which had been thrown back it didn't contain quarters. It contained a hunk of iron.

"Boy," he said, "we had every organization in Boston publicizing the theater. Even the Better Business Bureau issued statements about the new coin switch game that had turned up at the Rialto Theater.

"But, of course, when they checked on the bar of iron, and found the plumbing shop it came from, and learned that a guy in a 'loud-crash suit' who talked a lot had bought it—well, we got another layout in the papers. But this time it was a picture of me with a dick holding each arm.

• • • •

"HE'D HAVE never put up with that stunt I put on for the Shubert's edition of the Ziegfeld Follies' last year. That wasn't a bad stunt.

"We put on a tug-of-war between two gangs of chorus girls in one-piece bathing suits. But we put it on in the middle of the afternoon, on a traffic island at Forty-sixth street and Broadway. But I don't think the cops would have minded if I hadn't got one of the girls to start the tug-of-war with a pistol. And I told her to keep firing.

"Well, they ran her in. And then I sent the chorus girls, in one-piece bathing suits down to the police station. Though they were only in bathing suits—and camera bulbs flashing all over the place—the girls carried along their pocketbooks. And they threw them in a corner of the room."

Joe Flynn looked discreetly into his glass as he remarked, "It was a funny thing, but the pocketbooks were stolen from the police station and a near riot ensued. Of course no one knows just how that occurred."

It was two days later that police called the Shubert office looking for one Joe Flynn, with or without a loud crash suit. A voice answered the phone and informed the police that the Shuberts were looking for the same Joe Flynn. The voice informed the police that the Shuberts hated that kind of publicity, and that they never wanted to see Joe Flynn again.

The police official, mollified, hung up. And then Joe Flynn, on the other end of the phone, hung up, too.

• • • •

JOE HAS handled publicity for Mae West, Fannie Brice, Frank Tinney, Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor and even the one-time hero of American school kids, Howard Thurston, the magician.

Joe won't admit to what is said to be his most famous stunt. To publicize the movie built around the life of Barnum, he went to the great P. T.'s old stamping ground, Bridgeport, Conn. While he was there the museum mysteriously lost the suit of the original Tom Thumb.

Joe won't admit to having much to do with that incident, except to remark, that "the suit was so old, anyway, that the back fell out of it."

Tom Thumb's suit is back in Bridgeport now, its missing back carefully concealed by its position in the museum case.

Md. Utilities Rates 'Fair,' Says Weller

Baltimore, Jan. 14 (AP).—The give-and-take battle between State Senator Harry T. Phoebus and Chairman O. E. Weller, of the Public Service Commission, with utilities rates at issue, is over so far as Weller is concerned.

To statements by Phoebus that West Virginia utilities rates are lower than rates across the State line in Western Maryland, Weller replied that Maryland rates are based, by law, on "a fair return on a fair valuation" of utility properties.

Recently, Phoebus demanded that the commission lower gas, electricity and telephone rates in the State by at least 10 per cent. Weller formally replied that marked reductions had been made in recent years, and that the "fair return" policy was being adhered to.

'A God Great Enough'

Rev. Russell J. Clinchy, D. D., Minister, Mount Pleasant Congregational Church.

There is a story, in the Old Testament, of a man who made several gods for himself and, then, when some marauders came and stole the gods, he cried out: "Ye have taken away the gods which I have made, and what have I left?"

Rev. R. J. Clinchy, D.D.

That is such a vivid picture of so much of the experience of our time. First, men lost the God who could be destroyed by the new scientific knowledge of modern times. They had constructed an idea of God upon an inadequate conception of the universe, and the new truth swept that away. Then others built their idea of God upon a belief that God would always guard and keep them safely, and the impact of tragedy and loss destroyed that picture. Others have lost a sense of God because they were never given an adequate heritage of religion and so have had no material out of which to build a faith in God. All of these have lost their faith because the God they possessed was not great enough to meet the reality of life.

Now we know that, in order to sustain ourselves and live, we must secure a conception of God who is great enough for these times.

Such a God must be one whom we can approach only with such a sense of His holiness that we are inspired to awe and reverence. We have now proven that the attempt to think of God as a "hail fellow, well met," as a jolly companion, has not been enough to satisfy our deepest needs. With such a God our restless hearts are still restless; our dim spirits still seek the eternal light, and our frailty and sin are still unredeemed. Our need is for God who is so high and lifted up, whose glory and power so fills the earth, that we kneel in reverent worship.

We shall find such a God when we think of Him as the God who impresses His life upon us as the air impresses itself upon our lungs. It is as much man's nature to receive God as it is for the lungs to receive air. Jesus always tried to make men see what a natural part of life God is. That is why Jesus never argued about God, but simply presented His reality in terms of life.

In the life of Jesus there was a mother's love; wholesome work; abiding friendships; a high task, and, finally, a cross. But in and through all there was God, the God who came into life as quietly and as naturally as the dawn creeps into the eastern sky, and who was great enough for all the ways of life.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Smarting Under Accusation of 'Another Man Reader' They Welcome Light Love-Making, Girls Lash Out.

In this column last Tuesday, a young man publicly lamented the disappearance of "the girl of yesterday—the girl whom men respect, the sweet, smart, understanding girl who is capable of a true, fine, lasting love, which she reserves for her future husband alone." His statement that he has "not yet been out with a young lady whom he didn't make love to, or didn't feel assured he could make love to, given a little time," has stirred up quite a hornet's nest amongst the ladies. Today's column is given over to some of the comment received. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I take off my hat to you! Your reply of January 11 to "Another Man Reader" really rang the bell. I am a woman not yet 30. I was married for almost five years, but have been a widow the past two years. I have a college B. S. degree, wear smart clothes and look well enough to catch the eye now and then. I am a better-than-average cook, due to early training, and have a fairly pleasant disposition.

* * * *

My meeting with men typical of "Another Man Reader" has strained my sense of humor to a point where I wonder at times if it isn't a bit warped. I smoke a bit, drink a bit, and "pet" a bit in order not to be considered a stick and a bore. However, I cannot say that I enter with any particular enthusiasm into the latter. I simply hate an obviously struggling woman. . . .

* * * *

Now, I defy anyone to produce a man in the City of Washington, who would be a personable companion, who would be satisfied and consider his time well spent, if he took a "date" out for—let us say—a Sunday ride, dinner and a show, without trying to demonstrate his masculine attractiveness by at least a little amorous attention.

* * * *

I must be an eternal optimist, for I keep expecting to meet a man who will, on continued acquaintance, become a person all women hope to know; a man who will show his admiration without being coarse; who can talk and tell stories without being vulgar; who can be sincerely religious without being pious; who can be neat without losing his rugged masculine air; and who, above all, isn't looking for a girl "just like mother" and howling disapproval and disillusionment if he doesn't find her. How about it, Mary Haworth? How are we to make such paragons show their true colors? Or is the breed extinct?

D. C.

Calls Men to Blame.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I wonder why it doesn't occur to "Another Man Reader" that the "sweet, old-fashioned girls' " disappearance is due to just such young men as himself. Every young girl wants to be popular, but finds it practically impossible unless she allows herself to be made love to . . . Just try to be friendly only, leaving out all love-making with a boy, and see if he calls you for any more dates!

* * * *

Some of the loveliest and most interesting girls I know have very few dates and probably are branded "unpopular" by many, simply because they have more self-respect than to follow the herd and accept dates from the promiscuously love-making type of young men.

* * * *

Just because "Another Man Reader" hasn't met a girl who will resist his love-making doesn't mean such girls don't exist; nor does it mean that those who don't resist, enjoy it. I can't imagine how he expects to find his old-fashioned girl by employing the tactics he admits using.

OLD-FASHIONED GIRL.

Where Is Chivalrous Man?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I can't resist answering the letter from "Another Man Reader," which appeared in your column a few days ago. If his ideals of love have been dashed to pieces, it is his own fault. A lot of today's young women have contempt for just such young men as he represents. Perhaps he has met a number of girls out for a good time and willing to take their love where they find it, but as I have often heard said—why judge a peck of apples by one bad one?

* * * *

As a spokesman for my generation of girls, I would like to ask—paraphrasing his question—where is the man of yesterday, the man a girl could respect and trust and admire? The strong protective, chivalrous man who is capable of a fine, true and loyal love for a girl, and who has reserved that love for the woman he expects to make his wife?

* * * *

I modestly submit that I am a good-looking girl, a good dancer, and a "good sport," not at all interested in light love-making as a pastime. My ideas of an enjoyable "date" is going to the theater, going dancing and calling on friends, but do you think I can find a boy who sees eye-to-eye with me in the matter? Hardly. Their idea of a good time seems to be a late party and lots of love-making. If "Another Man Reader" is as unique as he sounds, it certainly would be a treat to meet him. GIRL READER

Another 'Fed-Up' Woman.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Hear! Hear! I'm so glad that women are finally getting fed up on men's "holier-than-thou" attitude, and that a few of them—notably yourself—have the courage to say so. I am referring, of course, to your reply of January 11 to "Another Man Reader." M. J. R.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

A READER asks about blood tests, especially the blood sedimentation test. These are rather technical matters, but they will be explained as best we can.

The blood changes in many ways in health and disease. The blood cells change in number and appearance. They can very easily be counted under the microscope. A certain concentration is always present in health—both of the red and of the white cells. The reds are lowered in anemia, and the whites are raised in the presence of infections like pneumonia and appendicitis. The cells can also be studied under the microscope to note changes in form, and this is a valuable procedure, because they are frequently deformed by toxins.

But besides the cells there is the serum of the blood, and this is affected by all things that affect all the cells of the body, because it washes all of them ceaselessly, dissolving out their waste products and immune products. Thus we have many serum tests to determine nearly any of the infectious diseases, such as the Widal test for typhoid fever.

The blood sedimentation test is dependent on the relationship between the blood cells and the serum. When the coagulation of the blood is prevented by adding citrate or oxalate solutions, and a test tube of such blood is left standing, the cells fall to the bottom at a very definite rate of speed, so that at the end of about an hour, in the case of a normal person, the cells have settled into the bottom four-fifths of the tube, leaving the upper fifth clear serum.

The cells settle more rapidly in the blood of women than of men, and very much more rapidly in the blood of a woman carrying a child. In tuberculosis they also settle more rapidly, and the more severe the case the more rapidly they settle, so in this condition the test has found its most uses.

A Preview of Spring in Unusual Hair-dos

CROISEMENT (crossing) curls in an individual styling feature the hair-do below, finished with soft flat curls around the forehead. All coiffures shown here by Antoine of Paris and demonstrated by Muzet in the Garfinckel salon.

A CLASSIC interpretation of the popular upswept coiffure is shown above. Note the unusual curls which frame the face and the uncurled top which ends in loose, flat up-brushed curls at the back of head. Ideal to complement the new hats.

'Let Us Be Gay' In Short Bobs, Advises Muzet

Long Hair Is Saddening, Insists French Coiffure Expert.

By Ethel Ehlen,

The Post Fashion Editor.

"LONG HAIR makes your face sad. It is aging! It is terrible!"

It was Andre Muzet, American representative of the famous Antoine, speaking and extolling the virtues of the upswept coiffure, as with scissors and razor he cut and snipped our rather longish bob. Noticing our bowed shoulders, downcast eyes and tenseness during this procedure as we watched the hair shorn from our head quickly accumulating in piles on the floor, he remarked in that charming French manner that is always so reassuring, "Don't be like that Madame! Think only of the present instead of making mental notes of the length of time it will take to grow the hair back again." So we relaxed and waited for the startling new coiffure to materialize.

"Who is really behind this upswept movement in hair-dos?" Mr. Muzet was asked.

"Marie Antoinette," he replied. "She is the inspiration for the current coiffures which sponsor shorter hair done in brushed-up effects by the aid of intricate swirls and loose flat curls. Marie Antoinette wore her hair back from the forehead, high on top, and with the back of the neck exposed. Smart women today should emulate this styling in a modified form, if they want to add charm and sophistication to their ensembles."

Neck Important.

With necks again in view, M. Muzet commented upon the importance of striving for a beautiful neck—also, the importance of the right make-up or the entire effect of the high coiffure will be entirely lost.

While coiffures, faces, heads and clothes should all be in harmony, this artist says he goes much deeper than that when studying a client for a new hair-do. He takes into consideration her personality and whether she is a business woman or a social butterfly. "For the ultra-conservative person who is inclined to be timid," he said "I plan a 'dancing' coiffure, that is a spirited hair-do that is a bit fluffy in styling. And, for the vivacious I concoct something more dignified and restrained. For some persons, I create a styling that is a merging of the two types."

With the new upswept coiffure which draws the hair away from the face, eyes should be dramatized, says M. Muzet—the eyes and hair being in closer relationship than any other two features. "The coiffure should be so styled that when the hat is removed, one can easily adjust it to its original chic by a mere fluffing out a bit with the hands," he said. "With this in mind, we often give a combination permanent, baking the hair on top and in back a little longer than that at the sides and in front."

For Full-Length Effect.

Balance and proportion are of paramount concern when styling the hair, M. Muzet informed us. If the proportion is not good, the smartest lines are killed. It is usually a good idea, he contends, to accent such idiosyncrasies as a strong jaw, high cheek bones or a large nose by special hair-dos, as this adds character and distinction.

"Take a full-length view of yourself in a long mirror when trying a new coiffure or a new hat, "M. Muzet advised. "This is the only way to see yourself as others see you—the entire picture at a glance." Aside from the fact that the upswept hair-dos are more feminine, youthful and smarter than longer hair which falls down around the neck and drags the entire face down, this magician of the scissors and comb maintains that it is imperative for spring and summer in order to wear the new hats. "Millinery follows coiffures this season," he explained. "We have been working in Paris with such authorities as Agnes, Rose Descat and Lucienne of Reboux, to promote perfect harmony between hats and hair styles."

Average Family Has Diet Lack, Survey Reveals

By Jean Green.

APPARENTLY many homemakers do not fully realize the value of protective foods—milk, butter, eggs, green and leafy vegetables, and fruits. According to a recent survey made by the Bureau of Home Economics, United States Department of Agriculture, the average diet is better fortified in proteins and carbohydrates than in the minerals and vitamins that these protective foods provide.

The findings of this survey were presented after a coast to coast study of the diet of 25,000 families. All of these families were white and none were on relief.

From the survey, the Bureau of Home Economics reports that three-fifths of all families received a diet rated fair or poor. The other two-fifths were getting diets that rated good or very good nutritionally.

The report states, "One out of every five families studied was getting a diet that, if continued over a long period of time, will undermine health and lower resistance to disease. Two out of five were getting diets rated as fair. A fair diet provides for each day's physical needs but builds up little reserve in the body.

Mineral Shortage.

"Of the minerals, calcium and iron shortages occur most frequently. In the North and West, vitamins A and B most often run low. In the South, it is vitamin G and the pellagra-preventing factors in which diets are deficient.

"Milk is an economical source of several important food values. It contributes more to good nutrition than any one food. It has no equal as a source of calcium. Without a generous supply of milk, it is difficult to get enough calcium for building and maintaining strong bones and teeth and for promoting a high level of general health. Milk is also a source of phosphorus, proteins of good quality, vitamins A and G, and it is excellent as a pellagra preventive. Even families who economize sharply should get plenty of milk in some form.

"Vegetables and fruits belong in the protective class because of their vitamins and minerals. Of all the vegetables the leafy, green and yellow varieties are especially necessary. The thin, green, leafy kinds furnish vitamins A and C and iron to the diet. Other green, non-leafy vegetables are valuable though not so rich in these food elements.

Suggested Diets.

"An adequate diet at any cost must include these protective foods as well as the body-building, and energy-producing foods. Those who study the nutritive values of food know that some types of food are more economical than others as sources of certain food elements. How this nowledge may be useful to the homemaker is illustrated in the following two meals.

"At one cost level a typical dinner might include a thick steak, French-fried potatoes, hothouse tomatoes, fancy rolls, avocado and pomegranate salad, a whipped cream and pastry dessert.

"But for an adequate dinner at a much lower cost the main dish of the meal could be a meat and cereal loaf. The meat in the loaf would be a less expensive, but no less nutritious cut. Scalloped potatoes, buttered beets with their green tops, cabbage salad, bread and butter, hot gingerbread, and milk for all would complete the dinner.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Jan. 14.

HAS ANYONE knocked at your door recently, to sample your mind? Someone will, probably, and soon. For one of the magazines for women is off on one of those big, Nation-wide surveys of women's minds. This magazine is determined to find out what the women of America think.

ALICE HUGHES.

The way it's done—they engage a concern whose avowed work is to measure public attitudes. This outfit works out a questionnaire. Equipped with this, armies of intelligent women query families of every income level as to their attitude on this, that or the other. In this particular survey, a cross-section of the 37,000,000 adult thinking women of this country have been or will be sampled for their reaction to marriage and divorce, to birth control, religion, morals, social relationships and other current problems. So far only 1 person out of 50 is said to have refused to be queried.

This project will take an entire year, and interests me particularly because it was conceived and planned by my neighbor and friend, Mary Cookman. To have been with a magazine but a year and to produce an idea as catchy as this is an editorial triumph for anyone.

* * * *

The women of the country who are yielding the findings of their minds to this questionnairing would be amazed that they are doing so at the instigation of this pretty young woman in her late twenties, a Barnard graduate who loves to dance and have fun, yet who can rip off an important, serious idea without adding an extra furrow to her forehead. If you know any local church, club or civic leaders, warn them that they will find a lot of controversial fodder in this forthcoming series.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Dropping in at the Lombardy Hotel the other day, I found everyone shaking dice and snapping their fingers over an amusing new game called "1937." Its main purpose is to laugh off the troublesome personalities of 1937, such as Mae West, Father Devine, Luciano, Jimmy Walker and others, and to look ahead to a brighter 1938.

Margaretta Stevenson, in her nightly orisons, murmurs a prayer for a larger birth rate. In the past few years she has made her living entirely off mothers-to-be, who are editors or writers on magazines and who need time out, from one month to three, for having a baby. Margaretta is a free lance writer, an authority on furniture and decoration. When Grace Young, editor of Creative Design, retired to have her baby, Margaretta stepped into her post for ten weeks and performed capably. When Marian Murtfeldt, of Brides Magazine, retreated for a similar reason, Margaretta wrote on brides for a few months. Likewise, when Camille Davied, of McCalls Magazine, produced her child. As long as magazine editors continue to become mothers, there will be work for Margaretta.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

WHAT DO the talent scouts of the great film companies want? Put to Mary Garden, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's most illustrious scout, that question elicited the prompt reply: "Almost the impossible! I am looking for the girl with the beautiful voice, beautiful hair, eyes and teeth and a beautiful figure. She should be about 5 feet 4 inches tall and weigh not more than 115 pounds, preferably 110. Perhaps she should also be blonde, as blondes screen better, but that is not so important."

There you have a pretty idea of the girl Mary Garden will look for when she goes on a tour of the principal cities of this country in February. Revisiting the scenes of her own triumphs as a great singer, Miss Garden will seek some young, gifted girl who measures up to her conception of "almost the impossible." If found, this girl will be given a screen test and, if she passes it, she will ultimately have a chance at one of those over-plump $2,000 to $3,000 a week film contracts.

Singer Must Train Hard.

But not without work! Miss Garden assures me that "No career demands so much as that of the singer. It is work, work, work! The young singer must undergo the most rigorous training, practice the most rigorous self-denial, if she is to become great. While she is a student, it is all work and no fun!"

For the student, there are no late hours, no parties and certainly no cocktail parties, for "cocktails are death to the voice and the attractive appearance." Training is all-important. It is not enough to be able to sing an aria. The fledglings Miss Garden approves will know their opera and will probably have concentrated on some one school.

"It is very valuable to know the language of the operatic school that is favored," Miss Garden explained. "Instead of dabbling in a little of the French, a little German and a little Italian, it is better to know one school thoroughly and to know that language."

I asked Miss Garden whether she would be interested in other kinds of talent and the answer was "Yes."

Also Seeks Dancer.

"If I were to find some young dancer with film possibilities," she asserted, "I would certainly want my company to know about her. I would do what I could to arrange an audition. But I am principally interested in the girl with the beautiful voice."

In the two years she has been with M-G-M, Miss Garden has interviewed about 1,500 aspirants for the screen. Of this number, four were taken by the company and are now studying in Paris preparatory to their film debuts.

Miss Garden today is a dynamic and interesting personality, whose advice to the young, ambitious singer should be worth a great deal, since she has practiced all that she preaches. She is 5 feet 4 inches tall and never allowed her weight to exceed 125 pounds. She is careful about her diet, seldom taking more than one hearty meal a day and never overeating. She likes to swim and, frankly, hates to walk! She likes to ride horseback. Most people, she is sure, are overweight from a lack of exercise, and "when you get lazy your energy goes." She certainly is not lacking in energy. I think she will find the girl with "almost the impossible."

Feminine Dress On Simple Lines Choice of Star

ALTHOUGH Constance Cummings is called upon to take a mannish part in the comedy "If I Were You," now at the National Theater, she is very feminine offstage, believing in flatteringly simple clothes rather than startling effects achieved with trousers and severely cut suits.

"Not that I admire fussy things," Miss Cummings explained as she relaxed between rehearsals in her suite at the Hay-Adams House. "I adore simple, well-tailored things, but perhaps the shift of roles involved in the plot of this play has made me realize more than ever the charm of femininity and of being what one is rather than striving for a carefully planned-out style."

"It is the same thing with make-up," Miss Cummings continued. "I don't believe in appearing on the street with a shiny, unpowdered countenance, but I don't make a studied ritual of making up. Above all I can't bear a make-up that looks artificial. The smartest make-ups are so smooth that one is not conscious of rouge or eye-shadow, and yet they are all used with care and simplicity that bring out one's good points rather than attempt to add mannerisms that are not in the face and general character in the first place. I suppost what I mean to say is that the modern woman is natural in a well-groomed way."

Caster Oil Hailed As New Help to Feminine Beauty

Buffalo, N. Y., (AP).—Castor oil long a bugaboo of youth, now is an aid to feminine beauty, Dr. George W. Fiero, University of Buffalo scientist, announced today after three years of research.

"Young women who ten years ago viewed the approach of a castor oil bottle in mother's hand with anything but thoughts of beauty, soon will be using castor oil vanishing cream, castor oil cold cream and even castor oil lipstick," he predicted.

Dr. Fiero, a professor in the university pharmacy school, said he had discovered the new beauty aids by passing hydrogen through castor oil in the presence of a catalyst and obtaining "hydrogenated castor oil."

"The same treatment has been given other vegetable oils," he explained, "but castor oil differs chemically, is more active and gives an extremely hard product which has yielded itself to many uses."

Miss Hagner Is Married To F. Moran McConihe

Preceded by as many parties as have ever been given for an engaged couple in Washington, the wedding of Miss Marguerite Colton Hagner and F. Moran McConihe, took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Although a comparatively simple affair, owing to the death last summer of the bride's father, Randall Hagner, the ceremony united members of two of the Capital's most prominent families. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Randall Hagner, of 2339 S street and Watch Hill, R. I., and Mr. McConihe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm S. McConihe, of Woodland Drive.

Their wedding was solemnized in historic St. John's Church, on Sixteenth street, with the Rev. Oliver J. Hart officiating. The altar was banked with tall palms, ferns and Easter lilies and at the end of the pews were standards of the lilies.

The bride walked down the aisle on the arm of her brother, Randall Hagner, jr., who gave her in marriage. She wore a white gown of heavy satin, fashioned with a V-neckline and a softly draped bodice. Her veil, made of several layers of tulle, was held in place by a white satin bandeau, and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley.

Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Alexander Hagner, of Warrenton, and Miss Isabelle Hagner, her sister, led the procession down the aisle as matron and maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Angelica Lloyd, recently chosen as the "typical Washington girl;" Miss Nancy Leiter, Miss Emily Davis, Miss Mary Louise Marsh and Margot Garrett, all of Washington, and Miss Adelaide Finkbine, of Pasadena, Calif. Blonde little Allison Hagner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hagner, was flower girl.

All the attendants were dressed in frocks of powder blue crepe, made in the same style, with a V-neck, slightly puffed sleeves and a brief train. With this they wore pleated coronets of the same material, with short streamers in back, and carried bouquets of white roses and snapdragons.

Reception Follows Church Ceremony

Malcolm McConihe, jr., served as best man for his brother, and the ushers were John Langhorne, John Newbold, Thomas Clark, Tinsley Garnett, Henry Mayer, Johns Hudgins, Nathan Scott, William Cushman and Alexander Hagner.

Following the ceremony there was a small reception at Mrs. Hagner's home, which was decorated with masses of mixed spring flowers. The bride's mother, tall and distinguished, was gowned in black chiffon, with which she wore a corsage of white orchids and a large black hat.

Among the guests were Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, who wore a mink coat over her black frock, and a small off-the-face black hat with a veil; Mme. van Haersma de With, wife of The Netherlands envoy, in a black suit trimmed at the neck and edge of the peplum with red fox; her daughter, Mlle. Nora van Haersma de With, whose stunning black hat was trimmed with soft green velvet; Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt with Mrs. Eldridge Jordan; Mrs. Roosevelt's daughter, Mrs. Reverdy Wadsworth, who came from Chicago for the wedding; Mrs. Buchanan Merryman, in black and silver fox; Mrs. Russell Sard; Mrs. S. Kent Legare and Mrs. Arthur H. Lippincott, of New York.

The chapeau plus recherche worn yesterday was that of Mrs. Francis Whitten. It was dark green velvet, turned way up in the front.

Others at the wedding were Mrs. Warren Barbour, wife of the former Senator from New Jersey, who is in Washington for a visit. She wore a long mink coat and a small hat trimmed with ostrich feathers.

Others noted were Mrs. Joseph Leiter, with her mother, Mrs. John R. Williams; Mrs. C. Mathews Dick, Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, Mr. and Mrs. Jean de Sibour, and Mr. and Mrs. George Angus Garrett.

Couple to Reside In Washington

The bride, a tall blonde, was among the most popular of the debutantes when she was presented to society here two years ago. Prior to that she attended Holton Arms School and Miss Walker's in Simsbury, Conn. Mr. McConihe, whose father is Democratic National Committeeman from the District, is a graduate of Princeton University and is in the real estate business here.

After the wedding reception, Miss Angelica Lloyd entertained several members of the bridal party at a dinner. George Wheeler was host at a party at the Friday Evening Supper Club for Miss Finkbine and her fiance, Alexander Hixon, and Miss Betty Royster, of Norfolk, all of whom came to Washington for the wedding and are staying at his home.

Among the many events honoring the couple recently was the luncheon yesterday given by Mr. and Mrs. George Angus Garrett and their daughter, Miss Margot Garrett. Other guests were members of the wedding party.

Mr. Cohen to Wed Miss Ethel Potts

The wedding of Miss Ethel Rosalie Potts to Nathan Cohen will take place tomorrow at 6 p. m. in the West Ball Room of the Shoreham, the Rev. J. T. Loeb officiating. He performed the ceremony at the marriage 35 years ago of Miss Potts' parents, Simon Potts and the late Mrs. Potts.

Mrs. Joseph J. Potts will serve as matron of honor for her sister-in-law, and the Misses Betty Ullman and Mildred Holtz will be bridesmaids. Ina Lois Potts, niece of the bride, will be flower girl.

Irving Cohen will serve as his brother's best man, and the ushers will be Gilbert Potts, brother of the bride; Charles Segal, Ben Berman and Morris Levinson.

Warshawsky's Work Exhibited

Col. and Mrs. C. C. Schiffeler Give Private Showing of Artist's Paintings.

There are plenty of big canvases in A. G. Warshawsky's exhibition at the Hotel Raleigh, but yesterday, at the private showing to which Col. and Mrs. C. C. Schiffeler invited their friends, it took a little one to catch the fancy of Dr. Fernando de los Rios, the Spanish Ambassador. He stopped to admire a small still-life featuring flowers, and remained to chat with the artist and swap impressions of Majorca.

An American by birth but a Frenchman by adoption, Mr. Warshawsky will have a one-man show at the Rheindardt Galleries in New York after the two weeks' exhibit here. The artist has lived in Paris for 25 years. It was there that Col. Schiffeler, then an art student himself, met him.

His work fills the French Room at the Raleigh and spreads into several salons. It includes a variety of subjects, ranging from scenes in Normandy to impressions of New York.

At yesterday's reception Mrs. Schiffeler, who, with her husband, received the guests, wore a floor-length gown of deep green velvet. Among those glimpsed at the reception were the Misses Pauletta and Ida Guffey, both in black ensembles; the Third Secretary of the French Embassy and Mme. Lucet, the latter in a smart black coat and veiled hat, and Robert Parson, of the Corcoran Art Gallery staff.

M. and Mme. Georges Bonnet Were D. C. Society Favorites

Washington Watches With Interest His Attempt to Form French Cabinet, Remembering Cordiality of Pair on Visit Here.

Washington society had particular reason yesterday to be interested in Georges Bonnet's attempt to from a cabinet and succeed Chautemps as Premier of France.

The former French Ambassador and his attractive wife spent several months here last winter and spring, making as vivid an impression in the minds of the Capital's social sets as any diplomatic couple ever to be here for such a short time. Washingtonians remember Mme. Bonnet as an exceptionally chic and extremely pretty brunette.

In many respects she struck persons here as the ideal type of wife for a man in public life. Speaking flawless English, she went everywhere she was asked, was cordial and natural in manner, apparently enjoyed meeting strangers. She disliked being photographed but submitted gracefully and seemed to be genuinely fond of the press.

Mr. Bonnet, in contrast, spoke little English and seemed shyer and more reserved than his vivacious wife. He too, however, accepted invitations freely and let it be known men and women of the press in his own country were among his favored acquaintances.

The Bonnets have an adopted son, Alain, who is four years old, has blond hair and bright blue eyes and proved to be one of Washington's most popular young diplomats during his brief stay here.

Jules Henry, something of a fixture in Washington society, will be widely missed here when he leaves to become head of the Division of American Affairs in the French Foreign Office, for which his many years of experience with the embassy here well fit him.

He will remain her for only two or three weeks after the arrival of Count Rene Saint Quentin, the newly appointed Ambassador, the date of whose sailing had not yet been set.

A successor to Mr. Henry had already been appointed. He is Jacques Truelle, who has served as secretary in Rome and as first secretary and counselor of the French Embassy in London. A bachelor, he is expected to arrive from Paris next week.

Also a bachelor is Jacques Chilhaud-Dumaine, who will be here in the near future to succeed Roger Gaucheron, former First Secretary of the French Embassy and now Consul General in San Francisco.

Spanish War Nearing End, Says Envoy

Ambassador de los Rios Declares Victory Is Assured.

G. W. U. Faculty Women Hear Representative of Madrid.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Asserting his government was confident "not only of the justice of our victory, but of the security of our victory," the Ambassador of Spain, Senor Dr. Fernando de los Rios yesterday predicted in an address before the Faculty Women's Club of George Washington University, that the Spanish war would be of only a few months' more duration. In the last six months practically a new army has been built up, backed by enormous enthusiasm, he said.

The Ambassador, who addressed the club members and their guests at a luncheon at the American Association of University Women's Club, was introduced by Mrs. John Donaldson, and Mrs. Walter C. Van Vleck, president of the Faculty Women's Club, presided. Mrs. Donaldson paid tribute to him, not only as a statesman but as a scholar whose contribution to the advancement of culture had been officially recognized in his own country as early as 1911, and from that time on had received recognition in many other lands. She told of his service as minister of justice, minister of education, and as president of the University of Madrid, as well as in the Spanish Parliament before he was appointed as envoy to the United States.

Dr. de los Rios termed the present conflict in Spain a struggle between fascism and democracy. It is the third civil war there within the century, he pointed out. The first two, in 1837 and 1873, were between absolutism and the constitution and "both times, liberty won the victory," he said.

The present conflict was begun in an attempt to prevent the agrarian reform and the diffusion of education which would give to the people the rights democracy insured to them, he declared. In 1931, there were 50,000 children in Madrid alone, who had no school advantages, and there was 45 per cent illiteracy in the country. Undertaking to reduce this, and to provide educational opportunities, the government in two years established over 1,500 schools in various parts of the country. In 1932, within eight months after government reforms were instituted, there were more books added to the Madrid library than had been accumulated in the 32 years since the turn of the century.

Clothes were provided for needy children and the agarian reform measure was passed to relieve the distress of peasants in agricultural districts. The uprising which took place and was quelled in 1932, was in direct opposition to this measure, which provided for distribution of some of the land held by wealthy owners, representing 5 per cent of the population and controlling 73 per cent of the property.

In southern Spain, in two of the richest provinces, women workers were being employed in the fields in place of men and were being paid only 15 cents a day, he said.

The uprising in 1932 was a coalition of the great landlords with the army. Although that was snuffed out, the undercurrent of opposition to the reforms of the present government grew until July, 1936, when the civil war broke out.

Answering a question from the floor as to whether the present conflict represented a struggle between fascism and communism, Mr. de los Rios said that of 473 representatives in the Spanish parliament, only 16 are Communists. The term "communist" is one often more freely than accurately applied to any who are seeking liberty and reform, he said.

Republican Spain is stimulated by two loves, the Ambassador asserted, the love of liberty and the love of humanity.

With Dr. de los Rios was his wife, Senora de los Rios, who is among the leading women educators of her country and author of several textbooks on geography. She also was a guest of honor at the luncheon, as were others from the diplomatic corps. Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Minister of the Dominican Republic; Senora de Baron, wife of the Minister-Counselor of the Cuban Embassy and an alumna of George Washington University, and Senora de Aguiar, wife of the commercial attache of the Cuban Embassy. Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin, wife of the president of the university, also was a guest of honor.

Mrs. Harold G. Sutton was chairman of the program and Mrs. George B. Roth, chairman of hospitality for the luncheon.

Baptist Home To Widen Plans

Recommendations made to the Baptist Home for Children as a result of the child welfare survey in the District will result in a revision of the constitution of the home in order to extend its usefulness.

Changes, discussed at the meeting of the executive committee at the home of Mrs. E. Hilton Jackson Thursday, will be brought before the board of lady managers at its session in Calvary Baptist Church February 1.

The home, which is in Bethesda and is supported by the Baptist churches of the District, was commended in the report of the survey. Mrs. Jackson, in her comment on the findings, paid tribute to The Washington Post for its part in furthering the project, and expressed the hope the home could be advanced along the lines suggested.

The executive committee voted to join the Council of Social agencies, a step which was among the recommendation.

It also decided to re-open the dormitory, closed during the depression. This will accommodate ten children and adds $1,500 a year to the cost of operation, with a nurse and dormitory mother in charge. The executive committee discussed fund-raising plans, and the first project will be a benefit concert early in the spring. The home now cares for 60 children.

Women's Clubs Board Will End Sessions Today

The executive board of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will conclude its sessions today with action on resolutions to come before the triennial convention in Kansas City next May. Among them will be one providing that Congress be petitioned to pass on an amendment giving national representation to the District.

Yesterday after the report of Mrs. Walter W. Husband, of Washington, chairman of the headquarters house committee, many individual contributions were announced, including chairs and silver, and $75 for specific needs, such as painting and redecorating.

Last night, presidents from all the States and the District of Columbia met at the Arts Club for dinner. Mrs. Frank M. Hoadley, president of the Maryland Federation, who is a resident of Chevy Chase, was in charge of arrangements.

Tonight, Mrs. Elbert W. Shirk, of Redlands, Calif., dean of department chairmen, will entertain the executive commitee at dinner at the Mayflower and a theater party.

As the meetings draw to a close, there is a discussion among the officers and committee chairmen of the political situation regarding the national offices for which there are contests in the elections next May. That of first vice president, in which Maryland and the District are interested especially, with Mrs. John L. Whitehurst the Maryland Federation's candidate, seems likely to go to her. Mrs. Charles W. Seymour, of Chicago, now second vice president, is the only other candidate in the field since the withdrawal of Mrs. William Dick Sporborg, of New York. Mrs. La Fell Dickinson, of Keene, N. H., who is treasurer, appears to lead the other three candidates for the office of second vice president, in the opinion of the club women.

Board members held their annual ceremony yesterday at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington Cemetery. Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson, president of the federation, spoke briefly, saying each flower placed on the wreath represented a prayer for peace from women of the State whose president put it there. A large wreath of green was placed on a standard, and club presidents from every State, the District and Alaska laid red and white carnations on it.

The women were addressed last night by Dr. Herbert Wright, professor of international law at Catholic University, on "The Role of Treaties in International Relations," and by the Rev. George W. Shepherd, of Nanking, China.

Dr. Wright expressed himself as optimistic as to the value of treaties despite the international crises in which some of them have been scrapped. He is now editing a volume on Basic American Treaties, the publication of which the federation is sponsoring.

Mrs. Helen D. Robbins last night was elected matron by the grand chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star for the District of Columbia at its annual meeting in the Mayflower Hotel. She succeeds Mrs. Elizabeth W. Rhine. Harry J. Schmidt was elected patron, succeeding Victor B. Rench.

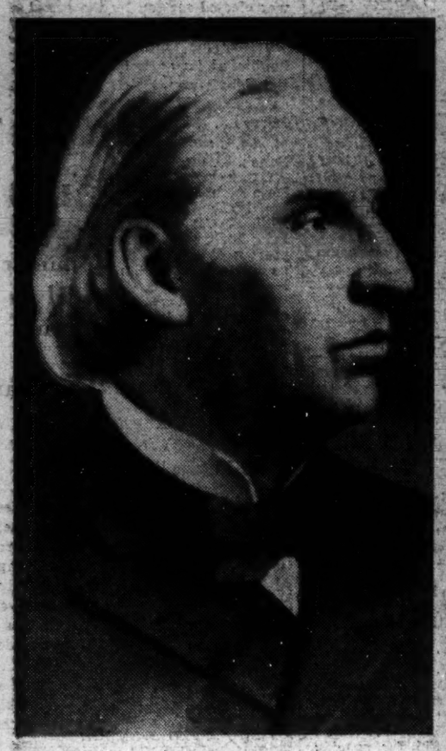
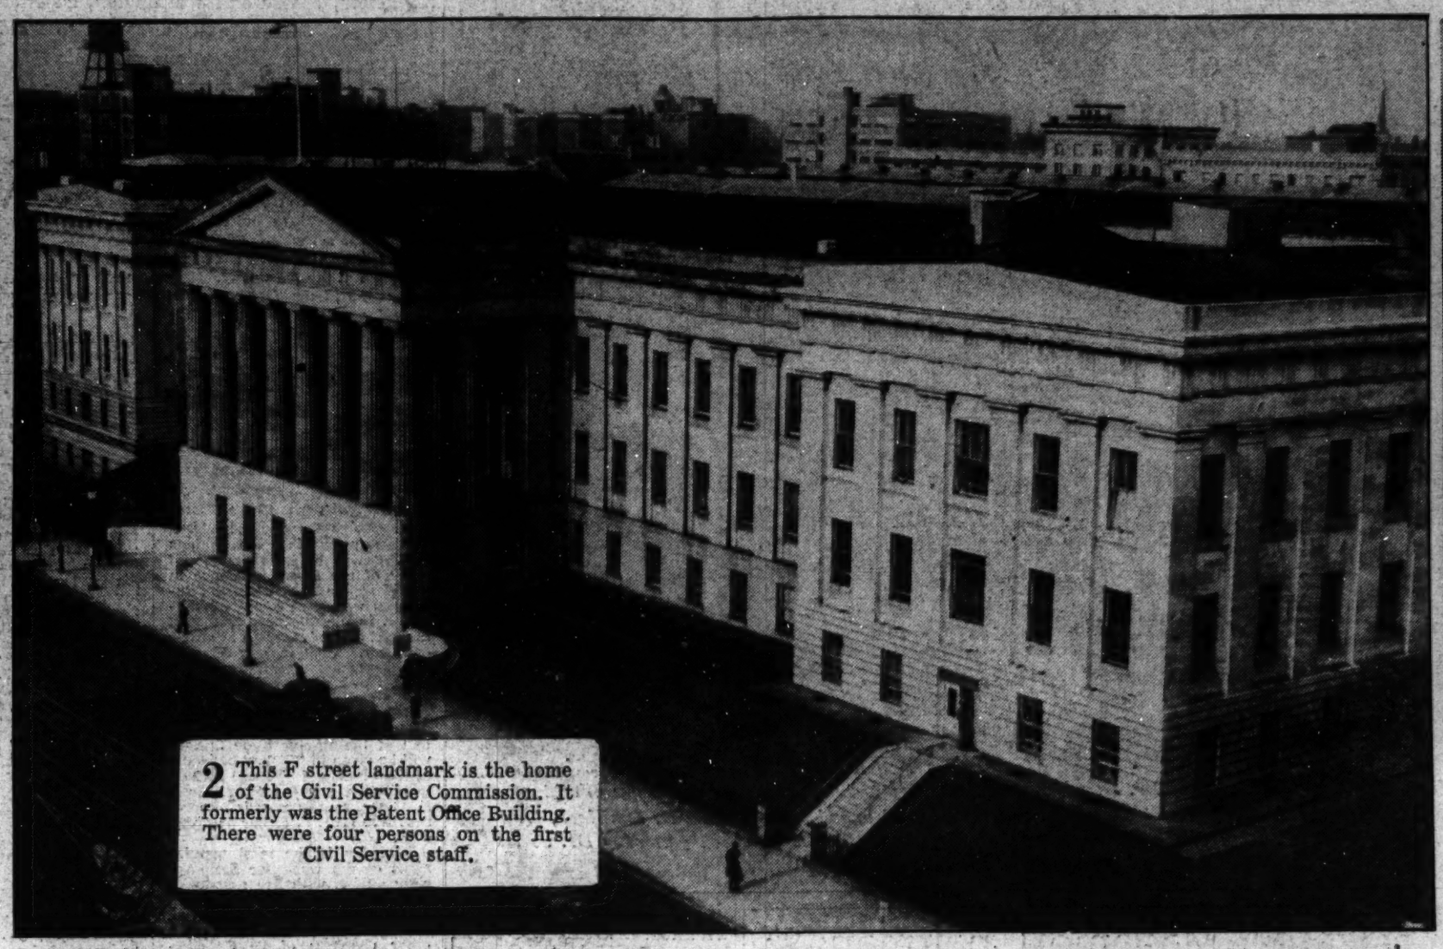
Oft-embattled U. S. Civil Service Is 55 Years Old Tomorrow

The Post is the only daily morning paper in Washington with A. P. WIREPHOTO Service.



1 The Pendleton act, designed to remove spoils from the Federal service, was signed January 16, 1883, by President Arthur. Three able civil service reform advocates, one of whom was Dorman B. Eaton (above), were appointed commissioners and took office March 9, 1883.



2 This F street landmark is the home of the Civil Service Commission. It formerly was the Patent Office Building. There were four persons on the first Civil Service staff.

3 One of the best-known officials ever to serve the Government was Dr. John T. Doyle (above), secretary of the commission from 1886 to 1932. Congress reluctantly passed the Pendleton act, spurred on by the assassination of President Garfield by a spoils seeker.

55-Year Fight for Pure Merit System

Washington, where the Civil Service offices are centered, and where thousands of civil servants perform Uncle Sam's expanding duties, joins tomorrow in the week's observance of the 55th anniversary of the Civil Service Commission. The Post presents here some of the titans who labored, often against difficulty, to bring to fruition a pure merit system. Especial attention centers on the commission now with Congress in deliberations upon governmental reorganization that would alter the commission's traditional set-up.

4 Theodore Roosevelt was a commissioner from May, 1889, to May, 1895, following which he won fame in the Spanish-American War with his Rough Riders and then went on to the Presidency.

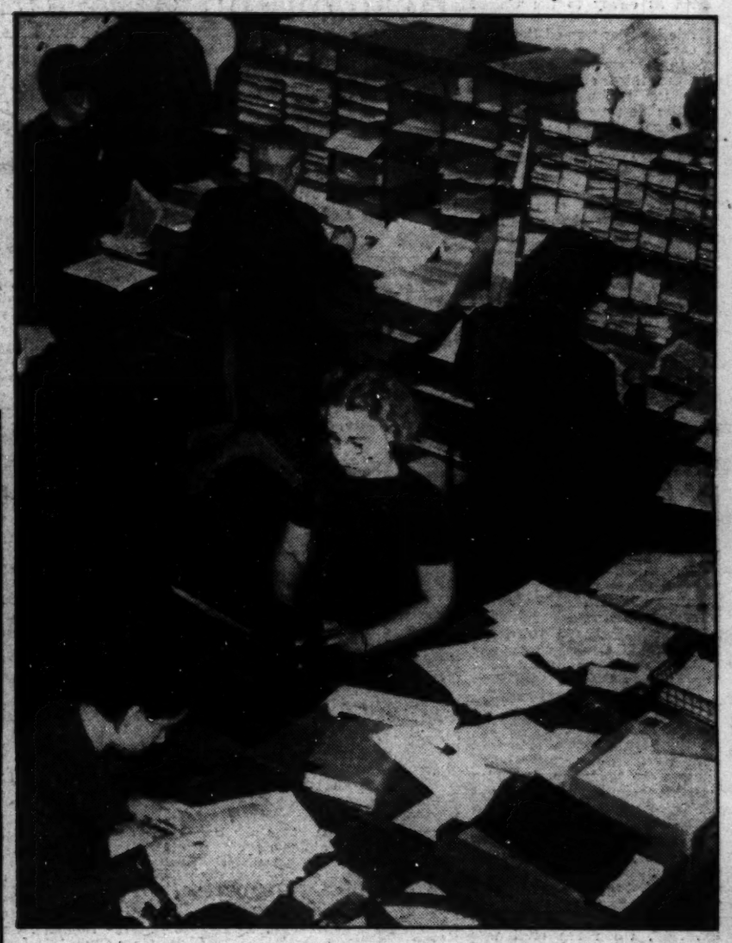
6 The only Commissioner to come up from the ranks was George R. Wales (above), who served from 1919 to 1933. There are three Commissioners and their aim is to place the Civil Service on a more efficient basis.



7 This is the busy mail information unit. From all over the United States people who want jobs look to the Commission with great hope and offer what merit and talent they possess to the Government. The bulk of mail is tremendous and the Commission traditionally has been shorthanded. Quite frequently as many as 100,000 applications pour in for a single job.

8 Vast routine detail taxes the Commission and its staff to the utmost. Here is shown the very heart of Commission activity, where examination papers of hopeful applicants are graded.

9 This is the current Civil Service Commission. The members are Harry B. Mitchell (left), Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, chairman, and Samuel H. Ordway, jr., the latest member. Ordway was appointed late last year. The local observance of the Commission's anniversary will take varied form, ranging from radio broadcasts to a mass meeting of Federal workers and others. The Nation is said to be growing more conscious of a need for a pure merit system.

*X WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1938 15

Harlan MILLER Over the Coffee

As every Washington insider knows, some of the best advice the President ever gets is dished out at the three great "off the record" dinners each year—at the Press Club, the Gridiron Club, and tonight at the Alfalfa Club, which surrounds its profundities with even more secrecy than the others.

* * * *

My spies have ripped a small rent in the Alfalfa's curtain of mystery and I am able to announce two points of its 99-point national program:

1. No outside rows in cornfields or orchards, because of colossal wastage.
2. More alfalfa and fewer parsnips in the national diet.

* * * *

One thing is certain at the Press and Gridiron dinners: The President is forced, at least on these two occasions each year, to listen; from around 7 o'clock until 11 p. m, or later he must absorb what's spoken more or less in jest; and four hours is a lot of listening.

"the American sword of Damocles"

Thus for four hours at each dinner the Damocletian sword of rugged American humor hangs over his head; for these four hours he hears more forthright, pungent, remorseless criticism, badinage, wisecracks and ultra-candid appraisal of his plans, possibly, than he hears from his advisers all year.

* * * *

The humor is traditionally unsparing . . . At one dinner a famous humorist unwound a ditty so pungent that some of the President's hosts were a little uncomfortable for their guest of honor . . . But he took it like a soldier, though he didn't appear especially amused.

Burning the midnight oil at both ends, Justice Black has plowed through virtually all the cases pending before the Supreme Court in the two months he has served. Frequently he works until 2 a. m., and when he gets to bed before midnight he is often at his desk in his Alexandria home by 5 a. m. . . . A few days before Justice Cordozo fell ill he drove one evening all the way to Alexandria to felicitate the newest justice.

When the wags of journalism undertake to treat a Chief Executive to a buggy-ride, the clock turns back quickly to what he has so aptly called the horse-and-buggy era, and no one spares the horses.

* * * *

Thus, in this star-spangled Democracy, the spectacle of the head of the state submitting to the barbs of plain newspapermen becomes the best show of the year . . . Tickets for the Gridiron are $8 each, and are passed out by the fourscore members like the King's New Year honors in England . . . Probably 5,000 persons make Machiavellian overtures to be included in the guest-list of 500.

"—the President listens four hours"

After the last Gridiron dinner the men who had appeared in the skits on Saturday night joined the Gridiron widows, who had staged their own show with Mrs. Roosevelt at the White House, in a special performance at a party on Sunday, and it was one of the year's most hilarious frolics.

* * * *

Perhaps the fact that the President does not attend the Alfalfa Club dinner allows that jolly party to let off even more steam than is released at the other two "truth" sessions . . . There the secrecy is the most inviolate, the satire most satiny, the humor applied with stilettos instead of barrel staves.

* * * *

Foreigners who happen to attend these dinners are aghast; they cannot understand how the head of a nation can tolerate such raillery at his expense . . . They do not understand the American sense of humor . . . Meditative Americans, seeing how gracefully Presidents can take it, sometimes wonder whether a President wouldn't be glad to listen to more candor from those around him—if those around him cared to be candid.

2½ Billion Pieces Of Free Mail Sent

By the Associated Press.

House members had before them yesterday a calculation by Representative Engel (Republican), of Michigan, that Government departments during the last year years had sent out 2,566,504,407 pieces of postage-free mail costing $220,803,425.

The cost figure, he told the House yesterday, included the revenue loss to the Postoffice Department, printing the free mail and the cost of the paper, from July 1, 1933, to July 1, 1937.

He said he figured that $75,000,000 of the total was for political propaganda.

Fear Typifies U.S., Declares Chinese Dean

Educational Symposium Told America Can't Avoid Conflict.

Legislation Impractical in Averting a War, Senator Says.

Lessons of the last war and shadows of the next war were the insistent themes running through the speeches of a Senator, editor and Chinese educator who appeared last night before the regional conference of the Progressive Education in a symposium on "Education for War or Peace."

Agreed that America had learned valuable lessons from the World War, the speakers expressed grave doubts as to the Nation's ability to avoid another armed conflict.

Describing himself as "a Chinese pacifist and hence something of an abnormality," Dr. Hu Shih, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, Peking University, declared that America's education for peace has been chiefly negative in character.

Says America's Afraid.

"Behind America's negative pacifism," he asserted, "there is fear, the fear of being entangled in international obligations, the fear of facing world conditions as they really are."

America must be educated to a new idealism and a new courage, he said. "The youth of the country must be trained to think boldly and act their part in world affairs."

Terming America's refusal to join the League of Nations one of the "historic factors" in the development of present world conditions, Dr. Hu said international relations suffer as much from "sins of omission as those of commission."

Referring to the neutrality act, and the Ludlow resolution, Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, told the audience of 300 educators, "There is great danger in over-reliance on legislative fiat to keep us out of war."

"None of these mechanical devices can by themselves save us from war. We need a clear understanding of the forces that make for war, if we are to act effectively for peace."

Stresses Propaganda.

"Propaganda was horribly effective in the period before our entrance into the World War," he warned, "and we must remember that the facilities for such propaganda are vastly improved today."

Divisions of the world into "have" and "have-not" powers or democratic and undemocratic nations were described as superficial by Max Lerner, editor of the Nation.

"If we understand the social, economic and political structure of the so-called aggressor nations," he said, "we will not dissipate our energies in moral indignation."

The most effective possible action for America, France and Great Britain in the present situation, he contended, would be in the economic sphere.

"The present policy in this country toward throwing all our energy and resources into an armament program is reckless, irresponsible and unnecessary," he concluded.

Population Of 1,500,000 Held Likely

Predicting that in 20 years Washington could be a city of 1,500,000 persons, Representative William T. Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, last night called upon the Central Business Men's Association and other organizations to unite behind the slogan, "Onward for a Bigger Washington."

Speaking at the association's annual banquet at the Lafayette Hotel, Schulte declared Congress wanted to do everything possible to help build Washington and needed only the co-operation of business and civic groups.

As evidence that the citizens, to a certain extent, had been remiss, Schulte pointed out that many apartment buildings being constructed in Maryland and Virginia should be within the confines of the District.

Improvement Needed.

"Washington is still in its horse and buggy days," he declared. "There are a lot of improvements that we must attend to. The streets must be widened, for one thing. Residents here—the kind who laughed at my idea of constructing subways under some of the circles—must realize that the march of progress is on."

Schulte, recalling last year's traffic record, urged citizens to cooperate with officials in attempts to reduce accidents. They can cooperate most effectively, he said, by obeying the laws themselves. He declared Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, both of whom were guests at the dinner, were ready at all times to hear suggestions.

New President Installed.

William J. Mileham, president-elect, was installed by Hugh V. Keiser, retiring president. Other officers installed were E. Catesby Rowzee, first vice president; Frank W. Lee, second vice president; Estelle M. Whiting, third vice president; Henry King, secretary, and George L. Haines, treasurer. New directors are Joe High, J. G. Feldman, Frank Hoffman and Frank W. Lee. Rowzee, Hoffman, Joseph H. Batt, D. Edward Clarke and Mark Stearman were named counsel.

Mileham announced his intention of helping individuals in the club gain their ends through organized action.

"Perhaps we've been acting as a service club," he said. "I think we ought to act a little more as a self-service club."

The banquet and speaking were followed by the annual ball. Arthur L. Post was general chairman.

Job Group Asks Continued WPA And Relief Aid

At Least $300,000,000 in U. S. Funds Demanded for Education.

In the face of "deepening depression," speakers at the first of a two-day session of the Joint Committee on Unemployment and Taxation in the Continental Hotel last night demanded continued appropriations for relief and the WPA, and at least $300,000,000 for Federal aid to education. Reresented at the conference are the A. F. of L., the CIO and the Workers Alliance.

Rose Stein, secretary of the Workers Alliance of Pittsburgh, said that of Pennsylvania's 3,000,000 employable persons, about 600,000 were on direct relief. Maximum weekly relief allowances in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, she said, were $4.50 for an individual, up to $11.25 for a family of four.

"If one body of lawmakers remains deaf to the demands of the unemployed," she said, "another body will be elected."

A surplus of 1,250,000 families over jobs in the South was reported by Howard Kester, of Nashville, Tenn., general organizer of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union. He said the "collapsing cotton economy" has been "greatly accelerated by the Government's program of controlled scarcity" and has "driven thousands of farmers from the land" and "increased the misery of those who have remained."

Helen Hall, of New York, president of the National Association of Settlements, reported a large increase in applications for relief. She demanded no diminution of the WPA, health insurance, and increased social security legislation.

Federal aid to education totaling not less than $300,000,000 a year was urged by E. C. Lindeman, of the New School for Social Work. This aid, he said, should cover health and recreational as well as academic instruction.

Velvet Ball Head Praised by Jelleff

Commending Mrs. John Boyle, Jr., head of the Citizens' Permanent Committee, for the part she played in the Velvet Ball, of which she was chairman ex officio, Frank R. Jelleff yesterday sent a check for $150 for the Children's Milk Fund.

Accompanying the check was the following note:

"I am sending herewith our check for $150 for the Milk Fund. At the same time I wish to say to you that I think you should be very highly commended for all the hard work you have done in reference to this ball, although it did not turn out to be as profitable as you expected.

"You are certainly deserving of the thanks of every citizen of the city of Washington for your tireless work in providing free lunches for school children, and as for me I give them as heartily as I know how."

Report Near On Bill Aiding Small Claims

House D.C. Group Meets Monday on Move for New Court.

Early Favorable Action Is Predicted Without New Hearings.

Early favorable action on the Senate bill to establish a small claims court in the District Municipal Court was forecast yesterday by Representative McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the judiciary sub-committee of the House District Committee.

McGehee said he will call his subcommittee together Monday to consider the measure. He expressed the belief it could report without new hearings, as the Senate District Committee held extensive hearing last year.

"Generally, the bill seems to me to be a good thing," he said.

The measure, which was drawn up by Judge Nathan Cayton, of Municipal Court, passed the Senate last July, but the House District Committee failed to act on it before adjournment.

It seeks to establish a new and separate branch in the Municipal Court, to which will be assigned all claims involving $50 or less. The small claims court will be conducted without the judicial formality of the Municipal Court.

The Senate committee, in reporting the bill, predicted it would eliminate the customary delay in disposing of small claims and would reduce expenses so that even the poorest person may be heard.

A flat minimum fee of $1 would be charged in the small claims court for the filing of any claim, but this would be waived for those unable to pay without their being stigmatized as paupers.

"The bill approaches the broad problems involved from a social rather than a legalistic point of view," the committee stated, "yet fully preserves the substantive rights of all parties, including the right to jury trial and the right to appellate review."

An important feature of the measure is a provision which sets up machinery for voluntary arbitration and conciliation of disputes of whatever character or size.

Further relief for the underprivileged is provided by authorizing stay of execution and deferred payments of judgment in reasonable installments, based upon the circumstances in each case.

Geographic Film Presented Here in Constitution Hall

The motion picture, "Edge of the World," portraying life on a Shetland Island, north of Scotland, was given its first showing in the United States last night at Constitution Hall for members of the National Geographic Society.

The film was threaded with a love story, but its outstanding features were geographical. It showed how the natives eke out an existence growing barley, oats, potatoes and cabbage on the few fertile spots on the cliff-girt island.

The picture was filmed on Foula Island and represents an actual abandonment of St. Kilda, or Hirta, island of the Hebrides. As a result of the making of this film, the British government has instituted measures to protect the Shetland Island life on other islands.

D.C. Benefits Asked By 15,000 Jobless

More than 15,000 applicants for benefit payments have been interviewed by the District Unemployment Compensation Board, Director John Marshall announced yesterday. Yesterday, out of a total of 2,066 applicants interviewed, 212 were rejected because their previous occupations did not come under the unemployment compensation act, he said.

"The first payment of unemployment benefits will be made January 31," Marshall stated, "and will continue each week thereafter for a maximum of 16 weeks if the recipient is still unemployed." Payments will not exceed $15 per week, or 40 per cent of the weekly earnings of persons who worked at least 13 weeks in the 52 weeks prior to their unemployment."

Bi-Weekly Forum Planned.

Balloons Frighten Flocks of Starlings Roosting On Archives Building as Annual War Begins

The hardy perennials have taken over the Archives Building, lock, stock and barrel, and custodians have reached into the old bag of tricks in an attempt to shoo them away. Balloons festoon the dignified structure but the starlings don't care, as this picture taken last night shows.

Coolidge High Plan Approved By Arts Group

Georgian Type of Building Will Be Erected in Takoma Park.

The Commission of Fine Arts yesterday approved the design submitted by the District Commissioners for the Calvin Coolidge High School to be built in Takoma Park at Fifth and Sheridan streets northwest. The commission conferred with Nathan C. Wyeth, municipal architect, concerning the design and made a few suggestions in matters of detail.

The building's design is of the modern Georgian type of architecture. It will be adjacent to the Takoma Park Recreation Center and will face Fifth street.

Citizens of that area had protested against the architecture of the building, terming it the "factory type."

The commission took under consideration—and approved in general—sketches of mural paintings by Ernest Fiene, in the New Interior Department Building. These sketches were submitted by the section of painting and sculpture of the Treasury Department. They were brought to the particular attention of Eugene Savage, painter member of the commission. The paintings will illustrate the work of various bureaus of the Interior Department, such as mining and reclamation.

C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of the Office of National Capital Parks, conferred with the commission with regard to several park projects of the National Capital which included the Columbia Island Plaza development.

A starling has the utmost contempt for automobile tops and headwear, but a toy balloon terrifies him.

The annual balloon offensive against Washington's starlings began officially yesterday, the "front" being the handsome, classical Archives Building. An estimated 500,000 of the birds—a boon to farmers but a pain to the man who pays Uncle Sam's cleaning bills here—have chosen that building as a perching place this year. So thick are they that they seem to form a new black cornice on the structure.

Yesterday, as the sun went down, two workers of the National Park Service walked around the building, each holding a string to which was attached a cluster of 20-inch hydrogen balloons. As the balloons ascended along the ponderous columns, the black "cornice" broke up and the thousands of birds whirred away, chirping their fright.

"We're going to continue this experiment in scaring the birds for 10 days," said S. L. Guthorn, superintendent of the Apex group of buildings. "If we disturb them just as they come home to roost, maybe they will go where they aren't bothered. Anyway, we certainly hope so. We'd be happy if we could distribute them among many buildings, so they'd be an incident and not the main feature at Archives!"

"If we didn't have the starling problem, I think the Government might save $5,000 per annum on its cleaning bill," Guthorn declared.

Starlings, however, are extremely valuable birds to farmers and lawn-owners, because of the vast numbers of cutworms and other harmful insects they consume.

So the National Park Service doesn't try ot exterminate them, although one interesting little experiment in electrocution has been going on for some six months.

Beneath the portico above the front door of the Archives Building are strung numerous wires. The wires are charged. "We don't have any starling trouble in that particular spot," observes Mr. Guthorn.

Randolph Sponsors New D. C. Vote Bill

Another joint resolution to give District residents national representation and "home rule" by amendment of the Constitution was introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), West Virginia, to relieve Congress of the burden of governing the District.

A similar resolution, sponsored by Senator Capper (Republican), Kansas, and Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, has been lying in the Senate and House Judiciary committees for six years.

Restaurants May Ban Tips In Pay Fight

Workers' Spokesman Reveals Notices; Dr. May Speaks.

Waitresses in Washington restaurants are being warned by their employers that tipping will be prohibited should the Minimum Wage Board set a legal wage without "due consideration of the tips received by the waitress," Mrs. Vivian Gray, representing the employe group declared yesterday.

Dr. May Tells Theory.

Dr. Elizabeth May, associate professor of economics at Goucher College, appeared at the conference, as a representative of the Washington League of Women Shoppers, and urged that the board "exclude entirely the consideration of tips."

Introduced by the league's president, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Colman, daughter of Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Dr. May stated that "the principle that tipping should not be allowed should not be a factor in establishing a minimum wage was adopted as the consensus of the executive committee of the league at its meeting on December 14, 1937."

A minimum wage means that each person for whom the wage is set shall be paid at least a fixed minimum, below which, according to the intent of the law, she cannot live adequately, Dr. May declared.

3 States Exclude Tips.

"Setting a minimum wage with tips in mind, that is, on the assumption that part of the minimum will be provided by tips, violates this principle," she said.

Large differences between the amount of tips received and the difficulty of determining and recording the amount will result in complications almost insurmountable, in any attempt to set up a minimum wage which takes account of tips, Dr. May said.

"We, as consumers, are entirely opposed to the establishment either of a minimum wage which is lower than a living wage on the assumption that it will be supplemented by tips," Dr. May declared, "or the establishment of a living wage, for which the employer is only partly responsible, inasmuch as he is required to pay only the difference between the tips his employes receive and the minimum wage."

Dr. May pointed out that in California, Ohio and Oregon the law provided that "no employer may include tips or gratuities received by employes as part of the legal minimum wage."

Miss West Is On a New Tack In Her Latest

'Every Day's a Holiday' Abandons Sex Motif for Con Game.

May West, alias Peaches O'Day, alias Mlle. Fifi, offers also an incomparable feat, that of being Mae West and not being Mae West at one and the same time.

Placating the Hays office, the embattled club women and the League of Decency, Mae offers entertainment that is practically smudgeless—unless you have one of those vacuum-cleaner minds that picks up the teeniest smudge. So much for the Dr. Jekyll side of Mae. But the Westian eyelids, shoulders and hips all continue to communicate the quaintest submeanings to innocent remarks. We fear that the League of Decency will have to cut Mae up into smaller bits than that of chicken in chicken a la King before they get a completely antiseptic result.

In going over the moral fence, Mae gets out of the sex field in "Every Day's a Holiday" and over into plain and fancy gyppery, including selling the Brooklyn Bridge, fur stealing and the like. Mae is supposed to write much of her own script. If she had anything to do with the Brooklyn Bridge sequence, we fear that La West owes royalties to Joe Miller as well as apologies to metropolitan audiences. The whole affair brings up a rather unnice question on La West. Obviously, she has shaded off on the sex angle in deference to critics. But really is a gold-digger a more undesirable person than a plain and fancy female thief and confidence lady? Personally, we'd rather take our West straight and unadulterated (or do me mean adulterous?) and think her more wholesome than a shoplifter.

A notable collection of character actors has been herded into "Every Day's a Holiday," including Charlie Butterworth, Charles Winninger, Walter Catlett and Herman Bing. Edmund Lowe stalks through the main love interest role and Lloyd Nolan (who would decorate a Hemingway film if any film company had nerve enough to make a Hemingway picture) does his always good best with a moderately villainous part.

Orchestra a Hit.

Clyde Lucas and his orchestra always lend real importance to a stage show. This lanky and pleasant director is one of the most versatile music men decorating the current entertainment picture. He can swing it out "far and wide from side to side," he has a rare touch in the Latin-American metier, he has the finest violin septet you'd ever want to hear.

The brother of the leader, Lyn Lucas, sings "True Confession" with a color and quality that lifts it out of its true melody class. He also shines in the "Chinese Rhumba" that gives a shining novelty to the Lucas Latin-American offering.

Best of all was certainly the violin septet in "Star Dust," with a special bouquet due to the first violin, a big husky person who plays with the power and delicacy of a Rubinoff. Another top performer is the bass player whose wicked thrumming reminds one of the old saying that, "If people really understood what some music is about, they'd put the musicians in jail."

The specialty performers with Lucas are of properly high caliber. Little Edna Strong tap-dances with practical inspiration and copes rather well with the lovely music of "Tropical Fancy." Low, Hite and Stanley offer a tricky contrast in comedy and heights and co-operation in dancing.

Perhaps best of all are Bob Flinch and his Personettes, this last being a pretty term for marionettes, but M. Flinch's marionettes are as much in the modern manner as Charlie McCarthy is in the ventriloquist's dummy line.

Did we make it clear? La West is "that way." Or headed that way.

Palace

Representing the screen's greatest achievement in the simulation of the fury of the natural elements lashd into a frenzy of wind and sea, "The Hurricane" continues for a second week at Loew's Palace Theater.

This Samuel Goldwyn picturization of the South Seas novel by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall not only reaches a climax of overwhelming power, but prior to its upheaval of Nature relates an interesting and spectacular story of the revolt of the simple people of the South Pacific Island against the incomprehensible restrictions placed upon their lives by the French Colonial Government. The tale concerns itself primarily with the adventures of Terangi, a son of the sea, who rolls a modest jail sentence into a verdict of many years by his innocent attempts to regain the freedom of spirit and action he has lost through an inadvertent act.

The background of the drama is picturesquely Polynesian and enlists the services of a huge cast of natives, in addition to a strong corps of principals headed by Jon Hall, Dorothy Lamour, C. Aubrey Smith, Thomas Mitchell, Mary Astor, Raymond Massey, Lester Cowan and a considerable list of others.

But it is the storm sequence, from which the picture derives its name, that will leave an indelible impression upon any memory. It is a tremendously realistic depiction of the destruction of an entire island, once the peaceful home of a colony of happy villagers.

Also on the bill is Jimmy Fidler's "Personality Parade," in which are recalled the vivid careers of a surprising number of screen players who have contributed, at one time or another, to the luster of the screen. This item alone is worth the price of admission to any veteran of the gelatins.

Anniversaries.

Casual acquaintances, as well as close friends of Fredric March, star of "The Buccaneer," are surprised to receive gifts and congratulations from him on important anniversaries. He keeps a file of people's birthdays, wedding anniversaries and such events.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

The Night Club Atmosphere Dominates Both Screen and Stage at the Capitol

'Love and Hisses' Is Gay Musical; Benny Davis' Act Is a Riot.

"LOVE AND HISSES." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a story by Art Arthur, adapted to the screen by Curtis Kenyon and Mr. Arthur, featuring Ben Bernie, Simone Simon and Walter Winchell, with Bert Lahr, Joan Davis, Dick Baldwin, Ruth Terry, Douglas Fowley, Chick Chandler, Charles Williams, Georges Renavent, the Raymond Scott Quintet, Chilton and Thomas, the Peters Sisters, the Brewster Twins and Charles Judels. Directed by Sidney Lanfield. Previewed Tuesday, January 11. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

BELL.

"Love and Hisses," the screen feature, is a perpetuation of that famous feud between Ben Bernie and his columnar sparring partner, in which the flavor of Broadway's glittering night spots is continuously prevalent. Benny Davis' "Star Dust Revue of 1938," on the stage, also assumes the guise of a cabaret entertainment, thus preserving the obviously intentional purpose to accentuate the frivolity of life as it is lived by the habitues of the resorts dedicated to sun-dodging.

"Love and Hisses" is a pretty nifty revel, as such things go. It involves a considerable group of Broadway notables who assume no masquerades, but appear unblushingly as themselves—notably Mr. Bernie, "the old mousetrap" of the podium, his chatterbox adversary in the fictitious animosities that so long have characterized their staunch friendship and all the specialists whose names appear in the small-type paragraph preceding these comments.

The story is one of "bitter" rivalry between a night club impresario and a New York columnist whose confidence is his own perspicacity is something marvelous to behold. The object of their counterfeit belligerence in this subject is an unknown young singer imported by Bernie from Europe to panic his matutinal customers and caustically assailed by the columnist as a complete and monumental "dud." The key-hole observer, a little later, "discovers" a singer in whom he perceives all of the qualities of greatness. He gives his "Yvette" a colossal build-up and tears to tatters the budding reputation of the European "incompetent." They are, of course, one and the same.

A Cellophane Plot.

Into this cellophane "plot" of the warring Broadwayites are introduced a touch of the gangster motif, the romance of a frustrated songwriter, from Boise, Idaho, the complexity of the Manhattan scene and the genial business of knifing your pal in the back. It all works out according to the accepted formula of all flippant musical fol-de-rols.

As has been recited here on a previous occasion, the surprise of the picture is the revelation of Simone Simon as a youthful songstress with a voice that should not have been concealed from the public so long. Miss Simon is no great shakes as an actress, although her ingenuous performance in the present vehicle is noteworthy for eliminating the constant pout, but as a singer she must be given rank with the youngsters of the celluloids who are endowed with something more than a mere vocal squeak or a throaty bellow.

Miss Simon has the temerity to disclose her vocal accomplishments first in a rather better than fair rendering of the "Bell Song" from "Lakme," later going in a bit for popular ballads and finally singing "Just a Little Love, a Little Kiss," in as beautifully clear and limpid voice as it recently has been heard. Not a great singer, this versatile young woman, but an infinitely appealing and pleasing one.

The principal roles in the fracas are portrayed in the accustomed manners of Ben Bernie, Bert Lahr, Joan Davis and the peephole actor. Miss Davis and Mr. Lahar have to tug a little for many of their laughs, although the fault is more in the writing than in the speaking of their lines. Dick Baldwin turns out to be a handsome romantic lead, in cowboy makeup, who can sing some on his own account. The specialists, in some instances almost "steal the show."

An Ace Stage Bill.

Benny Davis possesses an uncanny talent for making each of his juvenile productions seemingly better than any of his earlier ones. That is true in the present instance.

Every act viewed at yesterday afternoon's second performance was of the "show-stopping" variety. Space limitations preclude a complete recital of all of the merits of this performance, playing its first week on a professional stage, but there are a few "stand-outs" who may not be lightly passed over.

Among them, I should include the Three Wiles, dancers of exceptional originality; Billy Blake, trumpeter de luxe; Margie Knapp, named after one of Benny's songs and a potential star as singer, dancer and mistress of ceremonies; Master and Rollins, eccentric laughmakers and dancers; Doron Brothers and Mary, singers and impersonators, and Anita Jakobi, one of the greatest acrobatic dancers these eyes ever have seen. I hasten to add that this is meant as no slight to the conspicuous abilities of Blane and Wolfe, Don Hooton, Robert Baxter, barytone, or any of the rest. It's a great act.

The highlight of a brief supplementary bill is Lew Lehr's description of some unique new inventions in the Fox Movietone News—an idea that may have been borrowed from Ed Wynn. At any rate, the thing is a riot.

Microbes.

Director Ernst Lubitsch postponed the shooting of love scenes for several days during the filming of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," which co-stars Claudette Colbert and Gary Cooper. Claudette had a bad cold and Lubitsch was afraid she'd pass the ailment on to Cooper if she kissed him.

Is Grotesque Singing Comedienne

JOAN DAVIS

rapidly coming to the fore as one of the screen's most unconventional acrobatic singing funsters. Miss Davis, as you can plainly see, is better looking than most of her makeups cause her to appear in films. She is currently featured in "Love and Hisses," at Loew's Capitol Theater.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 14. — Idol Chatter: Wonder why it is that the "don't - give - a - dam - how-I-look" stars are usually the best actors and actresses? Maybe it is asking too much, but I would like to see a girl with Bette Davis's talent, Anita Louise's beauty and Lupe Velez's fire and energy. Self - admonition while watching the Ritz Brothers' daily show-off: "See no evil, hear no evil, write no evil." Warner Baxter's new boat is named the Warwynn—but Winifred Baxter will have nothing to do with it. In that Hollywood slanguage, "crepe" is the artificial hair used to give an actor a four or five-day-old beard.

BETTE DAVIS.

The Janet Gaynor-Tyrone Power romance is the talk of the town—but those in the know will give you five to one they never marry. Alice Brady's wit always reminds me of a Singapore Sling—it has both flavor and kick. Hollywood ironies: Cesar Romero, signed for pictures because of his ability as a dancer, has never played a dancing role. Most veteran Hollywoodites refer to Pickfair as the "Doug-out." Wonder if Hugh Herbert realizes how silly he looks promenading with his two toy Schnausers on leash.

Getting so any star who does not own a trailer-dressing room is a social outcast. Damon and Pythias—Hollywood version: Gary Cooper and his stand-in, Slim Talbot. Pamela Harris, Filmville's youngest scenarist, has been selling short stories and verse successfully since she was 10 years old. For a man with troubles, and lots of them, George Brent certainly looks cheerful.

Today, among the supporting players on a Metro act, I found Francis X. Bushman — once the screen's "great lover" and more recently the proprietor of a Hollywood sandwich stand. After nearly 15 years of professional oblivion, he is attempting a comeback on the same lot where he played his last big role, as "Messala" in "Ben Hur." On a set nearby, his son, Ralph Bushman, now in his thirties, is working, and only a few days ago Ralph's 12-year-old daughter finished her first screen role. I congratulated Francis X. on being the dean of the only family in Hollywood which is represented by three generations on the screen. But after thinking over the sudden expression that flooded his face, I am sure that was the wrong thing to say.

One of the best off-screen comedies in Hollywood is being played on the "Girl of the Golden West" set. Jeanette MacDonald—whose precise diction and perfect grammar have always set her apart in lazy-talking Filmville—has taken her role so seriously that she is playing it 24 hours a day. She walks with a Western swagger and talks with a mountain drawl. Today, while I was visiting with her between scenes, a special correspondent from a London newspaper arrived for an interview. "Set right here, honey, and fire away," said the MacDonald—and I shuddered, thinking of the goutes that will be read in deah ol' London.

Stopped in on the "Food for Scandal" set at Warner Brothers this morning and found the star, Carole Lombard, chatting with a man who used to be one of my screen favorites—Don Alvacardo. About five years ago his career went into one of those mysterious declines that are so common in Hollywood and he could not seem to pick up the broken pieces. I dashed over to congratulate him on being before the cameras again—and committed my first faux pas of the day. With Latin politeness he accepted the congratulations, but after he had left Carole told me that he is working as third assistant director on the picture.

Columbia

Nelson Eddy and Eleanor Powell, an incomparable singer and the foremost of the feminine tap dancers, reappear on F street this week as costars of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of "Rosalie," one of the most pretentious filmusicals ever brought to the screen.

The story, of course, is of typical musical comedy timbre, relating to the romance of a West Point cadet and a Balkan princess, but, withal, its narrative and music are combined in such manner as to compile a bit of entertainment that is as interesting and tuneful as it is enormous in scene and colorful in action.

In addition to the costars, prominent roles are played with their accustomed finesse by Frank Morgan, as a ventriloquist-king; Edna May Oliver, as his caustic queen; Billy Gilbert, Ray Bolger, who inexplicably is not permitted to dance more than a few steps, and Ilona Massey, one of the prime singing "discoveries" of the year.

Although the length of "Rosalie" is such as to preclude an imposing auxiliary program of short-reel subjects, the new week's bill at the Columbia, nevertheless, presents variety and interest apart from its major feature.

Star Turns Tinker To Perfect Motor

The lightning-like pickup in the convertible coupe driven by Clark Gable to the locations for "Test Pilot" is due to the many hours he has passed with a mechanic in a small garage near a local midget race track. The mechanic is an expert on all types of motors and has helped Gable tune his car to a high point of efficiency.

Warm Bahamas.

The climate of the Bahamas, especially between November and May, is one of the finest in the world and is generally regarded as one of the colony's greatest assets, attracting as it does thousands of tourists annually to its shores. When the temperature is at 45 in Palm Beach in February it will be 60 in Grand Bahama and at noon a comfortable 70 degrees in the shade. During the winter months, when there is very little rain, and cool easterly and northerly breezes prevail, the temperature averages about 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

A sea temperature which is never too cold and never too warm makes sea bathing delightful and very safe at all seasons.

Keith Musical Offers Lively Entertainment

Alice Faye and Able Cast Make Nice Diversion of Tuneful Frolic.

"YOU'RE A SWEETHEART." Universal picturization of a story by Warren Wilson. Maxell Shane and William Thomas, adapted to the screen by Monte Brice and Charles Grayson, starring Alice Faye, with George Murphy, Ken Murray and Oswald, Frances Hunt, Frank Jenks, Andy Devine, William Gargan, David Oliver, Charles Winninger, Donald Meek and a group of specialists. Directed by David Butler. Reviewed Friday evening by Dorothea Lewis. At RKO-Keith's.

The words and music are swell, Alice Faye sings nicely, George Murphy dances better than ever, and so this musical already has three strikes on any "show-me's" in its audiences.

It is not a super-super, not even a single super, and it hits one low point of distressingly bad taste in the Will Rogers number (really inexcusable), but it is amusing and very tuneful for most of its length and full of pleasant people.

The story itself is a better tie-together than the usual swing-sing saga. "Oh, Oh Oklahoma," the new Broadway show, needs publicity and also needs to postpone its opening night. This double necessity mothers a synthetic millionaire oil man, who buys out the entire house for the first week because he is in love with the star, Betty Bradley. And to complicate matters, Mistress Betty doesn't know he is synthetic. The possibilities are there, most of them realized.

George Murphy is rapidly becoming one of our favorite people. In this, we suffered through quite some footage fearing that he wouldn't be allowed to demonstrate his very superior dancing. As it turns out, he has to buy out the theater—yes, he's the oil man—and step over the footlights. When he does, it was worth waiting for; he has two top-notch routines.

Miss Faye Steps Up.

Alice Faye used to be just a blind spot in our bad eye. Lately we've been seeing her in a rosier light and this time around, we feel quite friendly. She does nicely by Betty and her husky voice is charming. And so is that of Frances Hunt, a brunette lassie, whom we like in this.

Ken Murray is amusing, his pal, Oswald, is not; Andy Devine and Frank Jenks add considerably; Charles Winninger has a bit; and the Yes-man, whoever he is, is very funny.

As for the "numbers," we particularly like "You're a Sweetheart," "My Fine Feathered Friend" (but definitely thumbs down on the act surrounding it), "Scrape the Toast," "Broadway Jamboree" and the "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" item. The latter's rhythmic trial framework dates back to a Rudy Vallee short but since Rudy gave us Faye, he probably won't miss the skit.

Subsidiaries include a "Screen Snapshots," featuring tennis as much as stars; a cartoon, "Hollywood Picnic," which has its own actor snapshots, and the Pathe News.

Metropolitan

"Tovarich," which would be the Jacques Deval play lately seen at the National, turned to a nice brown by Director Litvak, spiced by Mr. Sherwood and acted by Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer, is one of the better photoplays resulting from a stage play. Which may be a slightly stuffy manner of saying that "Tovarich" is good to see.

Miss Colbert does not have the fluid, airy delicacy of Marta Abba, who was the grand duchess on the boards, but Charles Boyer is almost so good as the original Mihael. Which is a boutonniere for Mr. Boyer. Colbert has an American voice, while Boyer's French accent might pass as Russian. This is a minor flaw but one which those who saw the play will note.

Mihael has 40,000,000,000 francs, which the deceased Czar gave him "until a better time"—gave him while the revolution made mincemeat of the White Russians such as the grand duchess and her consort. In Paris, they learn they are the guests of the government, which chagrins Tina, who had thought her market-pilfering had gone unnoticed because of her adeptness. The French were merely ignoring it. For they yearned for those francs, they did.

Eventually the francs go to a hated Red, the commissar who comes one night to dine with the family with whom the royal couple have found refuge in the guise of houschold servants. The commissar, Basil Rathbone at his superb best, asks for the money to prevent Russian oil concessions from going to divers nations. For, as Tina says, "What England gets, she keeps." Tina and Mihael hope they have done the thing which the Czar, who "was Russia," would have said was right. Anyhow, they keep their jobs, which is of present concern to them.

The duPont family, who hire them as maid and butler, come to revere and adore Tina and Mihael. Mother, father, daughter, son, they all become enamored of the Russian charm of the servants. There is comedy aplenty, bits of high drama and a light handling of tensity which means good writing somewhere and excellent delivery of lines.

Whether or not you saw the stage play, the flicker version of "Tovarich" is something over which you should chuckle gleefully; it has the just-rightness of a well-turned omelet. And to carry the absurd metaphor a bit further, all the cast are good eggs, or does that slightly smell?

There is a clip of Vitaphone pictorial features in which you may see how your ice cream is builded. In a colored cartoon, a slap-happy duck makes merry with a bulb-nosed hunter in a wacky something about how not to go duck-hunting.

HAROLD ROSS: Peter Arno, your cartoonist, entered La Conga at 2 a. m., complained that his kidneys hurt and stretched out on the floor, with his wife's fur coat under his head, to be comfortable. At 3:45 he refused to go to the Medical Arts Hospital, in the same building upstairs, so a private ambulance took him to Polyclinic . . . John L. Lewis: Sidney Kingsley, Pulitzer Prize playwright, will write a dramatization of Millen Brand's best seller, "The Outward Room." It will be produced by I. L. G. W. U.'s labor stage . . . F. D. R.: "Be Glad You're Well" will be the national slogan for your birthday ball. It's Jim Sauter's and Art Kudner's idea. Basil O'Connor approved it.

• • • •

BEN BERNIE: Herman Stark, manager of the Cotton Club's Nicholas Bros., will bring suit against you, your sponsor—and the ad agency for failing to present the Nicholas kids on your program, although you're paying the boys. Stark refuses to accept your explanation—that their voices had changed to deep bass. He had taken adv announcing that they'd broadcast, gave up their road tour in "Babes in Arms" and claims you canceled because they stole the show at rehearsals.

GEN. FRANCO: The newspapers here published your report that "the Russians arrived to aid the Spanish loyalists at Teruel." This rumor began when a stranger, wearing a fur hat, with a man's sock tied round it and tucked under his chin, shouted: "Tovarich!" to another. The fur-hatted man was Ernest Hemingway. He shouted: "Tovarich!" to Herb Matthews, of the Times . . . John Howard Lawson: The WPA Federal Theater received your wire yesterday, congratulating it on the thirteenth anniversary of the Theater Guild's production of your play, "Processional," now being presented by the Federal Theater. You said: "Here's hoping for the twenty-third anniversary." They didn't tell you that the play closes Saturday night.

STALIN: Gilbert Miller, the producer, was discussing the coming revolution, and told Helen Hayes: "Comes the revolution, you won't have to worry, because even if they take away your money you'll always be able to act. And I won't have to worry, because even if they take away my money they'll always have plays to be produced. But Harrison Williams . . . when they take away his $47,000,000, what will he have?" . . . Williams was told this, and when he sat next to Gilbert Miller at a dinner party he said: "Gilbert, if they take away my 47 million—I'll still have 32 million!"

WALT DISNEY: The Radio City Music Hall, now publicizing your "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," has hired Capt. Jimmy Rosen as chief of publicity delivery service. He's the midget who appeared as one of the dwarfs in Winthrop Ames' production of "Snow White" 25 years ago . . . Herman Mankiewicz: Charlie MacArthur, in explaining your gambling urge, said: "Herman will bet you that today is Monday—if you offer enough odds" . . . F. P. MICKEY WALKER: That battered young man who came into your restaurant Monday looking for you is from Scranton. He wanted to throw a punch at you so that you would flatten him. He explained that he had thrown a punch at Dempsey, earlier, had been flattened, and wanted to go back and boast to his Scranton pals that he was kayoed by Dempsey and Walker—in one night . . . Il Duce: The report is that "Save Me the Waltz," the new play by Katherine Dayton, satirizes your activities . . . John Gielgud: Orson Welles, producer of the modern dress "Julius Caesar," was offered $1,000 to appear on Benny Goodman's program, and do "Hamlet" with a swing-band background. He turned it down.

JOHN GOLDEN: In front of the Imperial, Evelyn Laye, Jack Buchanan and Adele Dixon had their footprints preserved in cement, as a press stunt for "Between the Devil." Gertrude Lawrence, starring in your "Susan and God," saw the cameraman and asked E. Duryea Dowling for permission to get into the picture. When he refused her, Miss Lawrence went to her dressing room across the street, opened her window, blew a long fish horn, and shouted to the crowd: "Right this way folks. Matinee of 'Susan and God.' Right this way folks. Get your tickets!"

Trans-Lux

The bill at the Trans-Lux Theater this week is a full hour and 15 minutes of news, plus some exciting and interesting shorts that go to make one of the best shows presented since this novel theater opened in Washington.

The grand old Leviathan looks a bit gloomy as she prepares for her last voyage, this time to the scrap heap. Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City flatly tells the C. I. O. to keep out of his city. The remainder of the actual news section of the show brings in a bit of everything from everywhere.

There is a beautiful special of modern Czechoslovakia, Southwestern United States, and Broadway, New York, night scenes. "Stranger Than Fiction," this week, is replete with interesting subjects and the cartoon, in color, "Peeking Penguins," is the best ever.

Boy Oyster Champ Wins Bivalve Role

Lucky it is that young Robert Spindola is regarded as the colony's juvenile champ at eating raw oysters, for his newest screen role calls for him to eat dozens of them.

He has been cast in "Madelon," starring Wallace Beery, with James Stewart and Maureen O'Sullivan in the romantic leads.

With Shirley Povich

Oswald Bluege walked into Clark Griffith's little stucco office yesterday, unsheathed his pen and signed a Washington contract. But that, my friends, is not news.

Ossie Bluege has been signing Washington contracts for 17 years now. Every year at this season, he suddenly remembers that there is a small chore to be done—like putting out the ashes or taking in the milk—so he makes his way to the ball park, asks for the annual document and scribbles his name beneath that of Clark Griffith.

There is never any trouble. In 17 years they've never had a holdout argument. Mr. Griffith simply inserts in the papers what he believes to be some appropriate salary figures and Ossie doesn't ask any questions. No quibbling. No haggling. It apparently hasn't been any beggar's wage Bluege has been drawing. The Bluege owned domicile in Washington's fashionable Chevy Chase is not exactly a primitive leanto, and the long, sleek Bluege automobile never was the property of a finance company.

POVICH.

Ossie Bluege has been one of Clark Griffith's finest investments. For a mere matter of $2,000 the Nats purchased Bluege from the Peoria club of the Three-Eye League in 1920 and three seasons later discovered that they had bought the fielding sensation of major league infields.

But there was some slight hesitation on the part of the Washington club in buying Bluege from Peoria. Griffith, who had been advised that there was a likely-looking third baseman on the Peoria club, later was told that the young fellow was troubled with a queer-behaving knee that had a habit of quitting on him when he was running bases or at other equally embarassing moments.

• • • •

Bluege Put to Test.

The Washington Club's need for a third baseman was so acute, however, that Griffith nevertheless dispatched Scout Joe Engel to Peoria to appraise Bluege's talents. Engel, impressed by the rookie's fielding, was eager to buy him, but was haunted by the thought of that trick knee. He asked the Peoria club if it would permit Bluege to submit to a test.

That permission granted, Engel called Bluege aside before the ball game, pointed to the centerfield fence, and said: "See that fence, son? Well, you and I are going to have a race. If you can beat me to the fence you are in the big leagues."

It was no contest. Bluege won by half a block and when he pulled up sound of wind and limb, Engel made the deal.

The Washington Ball Club has never won a pennant without Bluege in the line-up. He was a Gilbraltar-like figure out there at third base in 1924 and '25, and he was still out there, the best defensive third baseman in the league, when Washington connected for another pennant in 1933. And all of this time he had never been any great shucks against curve-ball pitching, but the various Washington managers never had a third-base problem as long as Bluege was with the club.

His was the pinnacle of the art of third base play. Jimmy Collins, Bill Bradley, Joe Dungan . . . Clark Griffith saw them all. But every time Mr. Griffith is asked to name his all-time, all-star third baseman he hauls off and picks Ossie Bluege with no more hesitation than in brushing a fly off his nose.

• • • •

Boyhood Idol Obscure.

Of course, Ossie Bluege had a boyhood hero. Like most every other baseball great, Bluege aped the style of one certain ball player. But the low-down in Bluege's case differs slightly. His hero was no star of the big league firmament. The guy Bluege hoped to rival in his formative days was a sandlot third baseman with the Logan Square team in Chicago. Joe Spagoni never reached the big leagues, never even got into the small minors. But he was Bluege's model.

Clark Griffith could have traded or sold Bluege for staggering sums during those 10 years from 1923 to 1933 when the graceful Dutchman was giving the Nats the best third-base protection in the modern history of baseball. Virtually every manager in the league who broached a trade with Griffith brought up the name of Bluege. Whereupon all negotiations ended abruptly. Bluege was never on the market.

They never had to tell Ossie Bluege he was slipping. He admitted it back in 1934 when he said his off-season accountancy work was affecting his batting eye. He graciously moved to the bench when Cecil Travis came to the Nats touted as a sensational third baseman. And when Travis flopped at the job, Bluege moved into the line-up again.

• • • •

Has Tutored Lewis.

Buddy Lewis came along in 1936 and at training camp at Orlando that season Bluege watched from the dugout as young Lewis was given a fling at the third base job. He must have liked Lewis. Every day, after that first week of limbering-up training, Bluege was at Lewis' side teaching him the intricacies of third-base play. And two weeks after training had begun, Bluege ambled up to Manager Bucky Harris, pointed to Lewis, and said "He'll do."

It was back in 1933 that Billy Sullivan, now the first-string catcher of the Cleveland Indians, broke into baseball as a third baseman and was having little success at the job. On a day at Griffith Stadium, young Sullivan was peering out of the Cleveland dugout, looking intently at Bluege fielding ground balls with his matchless grace in infield practice.

Sullivan came out of his trance.

"Who? Me?" Sullivan rejoined. And then he pointed at Bluege.

By Bob Garrison.

Andre Jessurun, French welterweight, set a pace too fast for Tony Falco, veteran Philadelphia battler, last night, to win a unanimous ten-round decision in the feature bout of the weekly Rialto Fight Club show.

Possible suspension of from three to five years for breach of contract faced Falco for refusal to go through with the match for prearranged figures.

He was to have received 15 per cent of the gate but threated to walk out on Promoter Howard Livingston when the show drew only 350 persons.

The District Boxing Commission, represented by Claude C. Owen, stepped in to settle the matter and Falco's demand was met by Livingston.

The commission announced, however, that Falco's purse had been withheld pending his appearance against Jessurun. When he had satisfied the commission with his efforts over the ten-round distance, the money was turned over to him.

Meeting Set Today.

A conference has been scheduled this morning by the local board at which time Falco, a boxer with a ten-year record, will probably be suspended. The action would take effect in the 37 States governed by the National Boxing Association.

The fight, a one-sided affair, saw the Frenchman handle things as he pleased. Except when Falco butted his head and tied up Jessurun, he was constantly being tagged with stinging left jabs and hard rights to the mid-section.

Several short uppercuts staggered the loser in both the eighth and ninth rounds. But his boxing skill led him to clinch and hold on.

Most of the blows were delivered at close range. Jessurun gave his foe's body a rosy tint as early as the fourth round and, in the fifth, shot several damaging rights under Flaco's heart.

It was short but not so sweet in the semi-final bout which went to Pete Scalzo, sensational New York featherweight.

He scored a quick two-round knockout over Al Gillette, veteran New England campaigner, after 1 minute and 15 seconds of one-sided fighting. It was set for eight rounds.

Gillette never landed a telling blow and when he was floored did not appear to be trying to rise. He was counted out by Referee Charlie Reynolds while on his knees. A quick one-two accounted for the Manhattan youngster's thirty-seventh consecutive victory.

Results of Preliminaries.

Green took it easy for two rounds, then began a left-hand attack that put the Virginian on defensive the rest of the way.

'Irish' Carroll Leads in Scoring but D. C. Team Loses Contest.

Villanova, Pa., Jan. 14.—Villanova College's unconquered basketball band rumbled along the triumph trail to its eleventh successive conquest tonight, smothering Catholic University's touring passers, 51 to 33, before 1,100 spectators at the Wildcats' field house.

Piling up points with monotonous rapidity, Coach Al Severance's charges surge dinto a 29-16 advantage at the half time halt, then countered the Capital City courtmen's scoring practically basket for basket in the final session to easily prevail.

Despite the fact all of Villanova's starting five aided in paving the way for the victory, it was Jimmy Montgomery, center, and George Duzminski, sharp-shoting sophomore guard, who were largely responsible for the one-sided leaning of the final score.

Jimmy, a 6-foot-2 sniper, paced the Wildcat point poducers by cutting the cords with six field goals and three fouls for 15 points. A step behind was the keen-eyed Duzminski, who pocketed seven twin deckers for 14 valuable markers.

To Capt. "Irish" Carroll, scintillant C. U. forward, went high-scoring honors, however. "Irish" nit the bucket for seven field and two foul goals for 16 large and juicy points. Ambrose was runner-up for C. U. with ten points.

Patty Berg Leads Field

By the Associated Press.

Augusta, Ga., Jan. 14.—Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, shot par golf over the long hill course at the Country Club today to post a 36-hole score of 157, five shots in front of her nearest rival in the 72-hole Augusta woman's titlist tournament.

Tied with Miss Berg in yesterday's opening round at 78, Jane Cothran Jameson, of Palm Beach, Fla., found the wind too much and finished with an 85 and a 36-hole score of 162. Miss Berg had a par 79, although she three-putted 15 and 16.

Dodgers Refuse $75,000 Cub Bid For Van Mungo

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, Jan. 14.—The Chicago Cubs have made a new offer of $75,000 and four players to the Dodgers for Van Lingle Mungo, but the Brooklyn Club is not satisfied with the playing material it would receive in the transaction, it was learned from a reliable source today.

The Cubs offered, in addition to cash, First Baseman Rip Collins, Infielder Lonnie Frey (a former Dodger), Outfielder Joe Marty and Pitcher Clyde Shoun.

The Dodger reply, in effect, was "we want better players and less cash."

St. John's Five Beats Little Hoyas, 26 to 13

Holding its traditional rival scoreless in two different periods and during one stretch for 13 consecutive minutes, St. John's crack basketball team trounced Georgetown Prep, 26-13, yesterday before a capacity crowd in the Cadet gym.

St. John's, although using its entire varsity squad and several of the junior varsity players, gave one of the most impressive defensive exhibitions of the scholastic season in holding the Little Hoyas to five field goals and a trio of charity throws.

Against the Johnny regulars, Georgetown scored but 6 points, all in the second quarter and then in the third period with the second string Cadet team as opposition, the Prepman made two baskets, the first of which marked their first marker in 13 minutes.

Cadets Flash Smooth Game.

In the final quarter against the junior varsity, the visitors scored their twelfth and thirteenth points. Meanwhile, although a little off in their own shooting in the early part of the game, St. John's flashed its usual smooth floor game and deadly passing to quickly sew up its fifth victory.

Only the powerful Georgetown Frosh have lowered the scarlet and gray colors of Gene Augustefer's smartly-coached five.

The first string combination of Jimmy Giebel, Joe Gallagher, Bap Battiste, Jimmy Mulvihill and Rosy Swagart, warming up slowly, hit a fast stride in the third stanza and emphatically dispelled any doubt as to the ultimate winner.

Leading by only 12-6 as a result of the sudden Prep splurge in the second quarter, the Johnnies threw in 11 points in rapid succession, and without an enemy retaliation. In this rally, Giebel, high-scoring center, was outstanding. The tall, lithe youngster who amazed the gallery Wednesday by tallying 11 straight points against the G. U. Frosh, flipped in three baskets after eluding his guard by some fancy footwork.

Gallagher, the keyman of the Cadet quintet, played his usual steady, effective game, in feeding Giebel, Battiste and Swagart and setting up many easy shots. Giebel, with 9 points; Battiste, with 6, and Mulvihill, with 4, were the leading scorers for St. John's.

John Nadler, Prep forward, and Lewis Wimsatt, a substitute guard, were the only Georgetown players able to hit the hoop with any consistency. Nadler made two field goals and three foul tosses for 7 points while Wimsatt garnered 4.

1,500 Watch Twin Bill in High Series

Lincoln Parkers Win by 45 to 26; Raiders Triumph, 31 to 22.

By Jack Munhall.

Play ran true to form last night in the interhigh basketball games as Eastern easily defeated Woodrow Wilson, 45-26, and Western topped Tech, 31-22, after a struggle. Fifteen-hundred spectators in Tech Gym saw the two favorites sweep aside their second tests and deadlock for first place in the standings, with two victories and no losses.

In the opening contest of the twin bill, Eastern continued to show the form that marks it as the choice to lift Western's championship. Wilson offered a stiff fight in the first half as Eastern's passing and shooting was ragged but power gradually told as the strong Lincoln Parkers hit a fast stride in the late going to win as they pleased.

Wilson Improved.

The Presidents, though, were greatly improved over their performance against Tech last week. There was no sign of the old nervousness and sloppiness, and the game was fairly close until the last quarter. Eastern hopped into an early lead when Lee Lusby, the star of the night, threw in two baskets and a foul shot, the first of his 13 points. Wilson called a halt and tied the count at 4-4 as Don Dunnington, a promising youngster, dropped in two set-shots and Malcom MacDonald made a charity toss.

But that tie was as close as Wilson ever came. Eastern warming up slowly, forged to the front to lead 11-8 at the quarter, 25-17 at the half and 34-23 at the end of the third period. In the third period, Wilson made its last threat to Eastern's lopsided advantage when Bill Hawsworth, Don and Dave Maloney and Dunnington quickly made baskets and a foul shot but from then on it was only Eastern.

Eastern Gets Started.

The fourth quarter found the white-clad team led by big Cliff Quartrille and Hancock, flipping in 20 points to Wilson's 9. Quantrille, with 14 points was high for individual scoring closely followed by Lusby. This pair also was particularly obnoxious to Wilson's offensive. They repeatedly broke through to block or intercept passes and convert them into Eastern scores.

Dunnington and Hawksworth starred for the Presidents.

The Western-Tech affair, as was its precedessor, offered a fast brand of basketball. Western, displaying to better advantage than in its initial start against Central, took an imposing lead of 11-2 in the first period, faltered in the second to allow Tech to close the margin to 18-12 but rallied whenever the McKinley boys really threatened Tech's only threat.

The closest Tech came to trying the score was in the third quarter when Charley Kendall and Eli Blank tallied to make it 20-15, in Western's favor.

Tom Saylor, with 9 points, and Irving Needle, with 8, were the heavy Western scorers while Eli Blank and Kendall were best for Tech.

Dizzy Dean Spurns $15,500 Salary Cut

Bradenton, Fla., Jan 14, (AP).—Dizzy Dean's 1938 St. Louis Cardinal contract was delivered to him this morning and he immediately sealed it in another envelope and said he would return it because it called for only $10,000, "which is $15,500 less than I received last year."

Surprisingly calm for a man whose salary had just undergone a major operation, the pitcher said he did not have to pitch this season for $10,000 and wouldn't. Dean won 13 and lost 10 last season, a poor record in comparison to his better years.

"I expected a cut," Dizzy said, "but not such a big one.

"When I was winning 20 or more games a season for the Cardinals they didn't raise my pay by $15,500, so why should they cut me that much when I happened to have a bad season through no fault of my own.

Terp Quint and Boxers To Meet Duke Tonight

By Lewis F. Atchison.

One of the season's more palatable sports items will be served steaming hot tonight at College Park where the University of Maryland engages Duke in basketball and boxing. The dribblers, first on the twin-bill, start at 8 p. m., and boxing will follow immediately.

A capacity audience is expected to witness the debut of Heine Miller's 1938 punching machine, which it is rumored, hardly compares with the noggin-rapping brigade of a year ago. In view of the fact that National Lightweight Champion Ben Alperstein, a southpaw, is the lone regular back from last winter, it hardly can be expected to compare favorably with that potent and well-balanced collection of fisticuffers.

Miller has a promising array of talent whipped into shape for the inaugural, and, despite all adverse criticism, the team figures to at least tie the Blue Devils, if it doesn't win. Duke, while not as potent as last year, when it finished second to the Terps for the title, is formidable. It broke even in two previous matches, defeating Appalachian College, 5-3, and losing to South Carolina, 3-5. The latter, however, is rated a heavy favorite to win the conference crown this season.

Leading the visitors is Capt. Danny Farrar, southpaw welterweight champion of the conference. Farrar dropped a close decision to Ivan Nedomatsky for the title last winter, and consequently wants to win the Maryland duel more than any other. Bobby Price, 115 pounds; Wilton Mann, 165, and "Swede" Vincent, light-heavyweight, are the most formidable of the remaining squad members. The four other positions will be manned by rookies, but rookies with a punch.

Maryland, however, has some promising young mittmen who will make their debut in conference competition tonight, and who swing some mighty unhealthy punches. In Bob Bradley, 125 pounds; Nathan Askin, 145; Bill Johnson, 155, and Junior Cox, 165, Alperstein has a supporting cast that may be sufficient to swing the tide of battle toward the Terps. Every one carries dynamite in the gloves, and while they may be a trifle short on polish, they have enough punch to offset that disadvantage.

Duke's basketball team doesn't rank with its predecessors, having absorbed a bad whipping at Navy's hands, among others, but for some inexplicable reason has been installed a favorite over its host.

Pixlee's Departure Confirmed by Board

George Washington University authorities last night confirmed reports that James E. Pixlee, director of athletics and head football coach, will relinquish his duties and will be succeeded by Bill Reinhart as football coach. The change is effective February 1.

A statement issued by David Bornet, representing the alumni athletic advisory committee, said in part:

"Under the plan of organization approved by the board of trustees, Associate Prof. Max Farrington will direct the physical education department. Reinhart will supervise the coaching of all athletic teams. These two divisions will be co-ordinated by Prof. Pixlee."

As head coach, Reinhart will select his own assistants, subject to the approval of the advisory committee. Pixlee, in taking sabbatical leave, remains a member of the faculty and can reclaim his position in 1939.

Even a Brooks Can't Pick Up Coins With Boxing Gloves or Slip a Kayo Over Johnny Coulon

By Walter Haight.

It happened one night at Ardmore, Md., where Washington's sporting gentry was staging its bootleg fighting shows. Mickey Brooks, now the custodian of the press boxes at the Maryland tracks, was then in his glory as a fighter. The preliminaries were on and Mickey, making his first start in a main bout, was having his hands wrapped.

HAIGHT.

One of the Ninth street boys bounded through the dressing room door and announced that the box office had just been stuck up and there wouldn't be enough dough to pay off on the main go. Mickey bemoaned his luck. The promoter pleaded with Mickey and his opponent to go through with the show. He would hock his diamond stickpin or something to make good later. However, the fighters wanted money on the line.

Then the promoter made his last bid. He said that he would ask the customers if they liked the fight to throw money in the ring. Under his plan the winner was to take all the cash. That sounded better than nothing, so Mickey and his foe agreed.

Fight Was a Honey.

Mickey knew that he had to make it a good show and a winning fight. It was a honey. They fairly waded around in blood. Finally, Mickey pounded a right to his rival's jaw and he went down and definitely out. It was a great finish. The ring was showered with coins and bills. Mickey smiled and bowed and loved it when some dandy cracked him aside the head with a gold watch.

There was another barrage of pennies from heaven.

Mickey rushed over to his second and yelled, "Hey, Jake, cut these strings so I can get my gloves off and start picking up." The second, appeared not to hear him, and started scooping the money up by the handfuls. Mickey's manager and his opponent's manager then began pick'ng up coins. Mickey pleaded with them to cut or untie the gloves. They just went right on picking up money and watches.

He danced, kicked and raved but was unable to get a nickel. Mickey bit at the knots. Finally the last coin was off the canvas and those who had the money disappeared.

Insisted on Bow Knots.

Mickey is fairly boiling over with stories like the Ardmore incident but the darb of them all is his version of his battle with Johnny Coulon, at the time the latter was world's champion. Mickey tells it in the language of the mob and the account of that fight has gained him invitations to many a swell gathering, particularly among the wealthy racing set.

He will not begin the story unless everything is in keeping. He places chairs in the imaginary corners, imitates the bell and does the speaking for the champion and the referee.

Mickey's version goes something like this:

It was during the early days of the war when the fight champions were making tours of the training camps, giving exhibitions for the soldiers and sailors. Mickey was a member of the Norfolk Navy Yard boxing team but he was the fifth best man at his weight.

Mickey Had Little Hope.

Mickey heard that Johnny Coulon was coming for a fight at the yard. He had only slight hope that the boxing coach would pick him. It would be a great spot to be fighting the champion. Young Burns, I believe that was his name, was selected to meet the champion. Mickey helped Burns train for the big battle and envied him.

A few hours before the fight was scheduled, Burns was taken ill suddenly. Somebody must fight the champion. The coach lined up his men in the class and asked, "Who wants to fight the champ?" Mickey stepped forward so gingerly that the coach picked him.

Mickey was in his glory. Even as the coach gave him pre-bout instructions, Mickey was planning his own fight. "Whatta chance," he mused. "In the same ring with a champ. I'll show him something."

And so, before upward of 8,000 sailors, soldiers and marines, Mickey climbed into the ring to meet Johnny Coulon, world champion.

I'm going to let Mickey carry the story along.

Didn't Hear Referee.

"I didn't even hear the referee give us instructions. I just stood and eyed the champ. He looked like a good fighter but he had never met a Brooks. Finally we returned to our corners. The bell rang and we met in the center of the ring. 'You're a great man, Brooks,' I says to myself as I pecked him with a left as we danced around. He didn't even move his head, so I pecks him again. 'Well,' I says to myself, 'so this is the champ. I can hit him too.' I puts a little more zip into one and he comes back with a fairly stiff left that catches me on the side of the face."

Of course, Mickey is acting out the fight while he is talking and his head bobs back from the imaginary blow.

"Well, the champ had hit me and what's more, it didn't hurt. I pecked him with a left and caught his right on my arm and we went together. He tapped me around the ribs and I says to myself, 'He ain't much infighter, either. We neither hit a solid blow during the round. At the bell, I skipped back to my corner as the service men gave me a big hand.

"As I sat there resting I was thinking. This champ didn't look so hot. If I could slip over a punch on him, maybe I could K. O. him. The war couldn't last forever. With a duke over the champ, well, I'd be the champ. Plenty of pork chops then. Anyway, I might try to find a spot.

Caught Champ on Head.

"When we started again, I says to myself, 'Now' and at the same time threw a hard left hook. It caught the champ on the side of the head. We fell into a clinch. His face was near my ear and he says, 'Think you're smart, don't you. Remember kid, dis is an exhibition.' I told him I was sorry and we started to mix it up. He belted me one one in the stomach and with went at it. Finally, I saw an opening and a slammed my right into it. The champ's head bobbed and the crowd went wild. We went into a clinch. 'Do you want me to end dis fight right now?" whispered the champ, as he let me have a poke in the kidney from the back. 'Honest, champ, that one slipped,' I says. The bell rang.

"Again it was thinking time. Two rounds with the champion and not a mark on me. I'm glad I got in this fight game. He's just trying to talk me out of this fight. I'm going to connect with his button the next time. I need that crown.

"The champ misses me with a right and I think I see my spot. I go 'ugh' and slam in the hardest right I ever threw. It lands right on the point of his chin. That was my big money punch—but wham! What was that? How did I get on this canvas? And what is that man counting for? So, I'm on the floor. '—Five, six, seven,' he drolls. I jumps to my feet and sticks out my left. I fall over in a clinch and I whispers to the champ, 'You ain't mad, are you, pal. I was just trying to make a hit with the boys on my detail. How about you carrying me for a couple of rounds?' The champ says, 'All right, but remember, no more of dis monkey business.' The bell rang.

Everything to Win.

"I sits in my corner and I says to myself, 'I've got all to win and nothing to lose. What if I did promise the champ I wouldn't get rough no more? If I could talk him into being careless maybe I could put over that Sunday punch and take him. Brooks would look good in that crown.'

"We got into action again. I was going to work early in this round. The champ danced around me, pecking me with lefts. I was with my back to the ropes. I bounced back and threw my right so hard I thought it would break off. It caught him on the jaw. Wham! He's not down. I'm down. I'm sitting down. The referee starts counting. My seconds yell, 'Git up Mickey. Git up, you aint hurt.' The referee keeps saying the numbers. I sit there looking at my corner and I yells 'I ain't hurt. I can beat this champ I'm all right. But I just can't move my hands and legs.'"

He told this story one night at a party given by Col. E. R. Bradley the famous Kentuckian. When he was describing this first knockdown Mickey struck himself in the jaw so hard that he went down like a bag of flour, struck his head on the marble floor and was out cold. A waiter rushed over with two goblets of water, doused it in Mickey's face and he jumped to his feet and went right on swinging imaginary punches without missing a beat in the story.

Brush Hook Takes Chief Hialeah Race

Whitney Gelding Wins Silver Bluff Purse; 2 Riders Set Down.

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 14.—Mrs. Payne Whitney's Brush Hook, a 5-year-old gelding making his first appearance since last May at Belmont Park, came back to the turf wars in prime fettle and won the Silver Bluff Purse, mile and a furlong feature of the program here today. Under the aggressive handling of Eddie Arcaro, the chestnut son of Sickle held on in a fighting finish to beat the unlucky Our Willie, owned by Jesse Spencer, by a half length. I. J. Collins' Bernard F. was headed for the place.

Our Willie, which has been knocking at the door in five starts this winter, was crowded in the stretch run and made a game effort. He was favorite in the field of seven 4-year-olds and upward. The winner, which won three of his eight 1937 races and ran on the turf course here last winter, paid $9.90 and finished the 9 furlongs in 1:50 flat.

Bernard F. tried to make it a runaway affair, stealing out to a long early lead while Arcaro wisely restrained Brush Hook in second place. Our Willie was next in line. Brush Hook began picking up ground as they rounded the last bend, nipped the pacemaker a furlong out then held on tenaciously when Our Willie made a courageous challenge.

Jockey Lee Hardy, one of the real veterans of the game, was suspended indefinitely for what the stewards termed an unsatisfactory ride on Candle ends in the third race. The suspenston was ordered to take effect immediately. Earlier in the day, Johnny Jaekle drew a suspension of 10 racing days for rough riding leaving the stalls astride Spanish Maid, which finished second in the second event.

For the second day in a row, a 2-year-old representing the Paragon stable and ridden by Mike Sarno won the opening event at lucrative odds. This time it was Roidef, a chestnut son of John P. Grier, which had the foot to outrun a batch of newcomers. He lasted to win by a neck from Kate Smith, paying his backers $23.40 for two. The first two horses dominated the running, with Kate Smith gaining on the victor in the final strides. Jack Horner was a game closing third, a length behind. The well backed Spin On was slow to get into stride and finished well back.

ROIDEF, away forwardly, took command in the run out of the chute while bearing out slightly, drew clear approaching the furlong pole, but then faltered through the stretch and just lasted long enough to stave off KATE SMITH'S challenge. KATE SMITH, quickest to break, lost her stride coming out of the chute, moved up gamely on the outside in the last furlong and was wearing the winner down at the end. JACK HORNER, a prominent contender, held on with good courage in the final drive.

SECOND RACE—One mile (chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 2:31. Off 2:36½. Winner, C. W. Fershall's b. g. WESTY'S HERO began fast, drew clear with a rush in the run out of the chute, was then taken under steadying restraint and held away for the entire trip, winning in hand. SPANISH MAID, going in nearest pursuit of the leader throughout, continued gamely when placed to pressure, and held PASSABLE safe at the end. PASSABLE, hard ridden and forced wide all the way, responded to punishment gamely, but could not overhaul the leaders.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:01. Off 3:06. Winner, Calumet Farm's br. c. PHARACASE, much the best, broke a trifle slowly, gradually bettered his position while circling the field, overhauled the leaders passing the furlong pole and drew out decisively in the stretch run. GRAND EVER, racing greenly, began to improve his position while saving much ground and wore FLYING ARK down in the last stride. FLYING ARK, forced a steady pace and raced HIGHER UP into submission.

FOURTH RACE—One mile (chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 3:31. Off 3:35. Winner, W. J. Sprow's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—INDIAN HEAD, $10.30, $4.20, $4.00; SMUGGLED IN, $3.80, $3.30; NIPPONESE, $12.00.

INDIAN HEAD, going in his best form, followed the pace well up under slight restraint until the stretch turn, took command when called upon and shook off SMUGGLED IN after a mild drive. SMUGGLED IN, prominent contender on the outside all the way, made a bold effort on the stretch turn, but was no match for the winner. NIPPONESE improved his position gradually on the inside, responded gamely to punishment and wore PEEDEEQUE down in the final stride.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,100. The Sunset Islands. For 3-year-old fillies. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 4:02. Off 4:07½. Winner, Max Hirsch's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ONE JEST, $7.00, $4.30, $3.80; JOIN US, $5.70, $3.70; DRIFT ALONG, $3.50.

ONE JEST, away forwardly, took command with a rush in the opening furlong and shook off JOIN US through the stretch to win under mild urging. JOIN US, a keen factor all the way, moved up menacingly on the stretch turn, but faltered slightly in the final furlong and just lasted long enough to withstand DRIFT ALONG'S bid. The latter, under vigorous pressure in the last three furlongs, finished with excellent courage.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200. The Silver Bluff. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:31. Off 4:34½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BRUSH HOOK, $9.90, $4.50, $3.30; OUR WILLIE, $3.20, $2.40; BERNARD F., $3.00.

BRUSH HOOK, going on his top form, broke forwardly, followed in closest pursuit of the leader in the early running, then closing with determination when the final issue came took command and outlasted OUR WILLIE in the stretch drive. OUR WILLIE, going well up under light restraint, moved up gamely on the outside when placed to pressure, but was bothered when Arcaro placed his mount under punishment. BERNARD F., quickest to get going, set a fast early pace and opened up a big gap while saving ground, made a game effort when challenged, but faltered right at the end.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PELTER, $24.10, $9.00, $6.10; VERY BUSY, $6.20, $4.00; TOP BILLING, $4.50.

PELTER, away alertly, raced JOHNNIE DEAR into defeat in the opening half mile, then drew out into a long lead rounding the turn and won as her rider pleased. VERY BUSY, a forward contender the entire trip, finished gamely and held TOP BILLING safe. The latter, outrun in the early stages, began to better his position on the extreme outside in the last three furlongs and closed gonig fastest of all, but the winner.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles (on turf). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:32. Off 5:32½. Winner, A. F. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOOMING GUNS, $21.50, $12.10, $10.80; RED ROGUE, $10.70, $8.10; WINGED VICTORY, $22.90.

BOOMING GUNS, running in his best form, drew out with a rush going to the first turn, and was steadied in front while saving ground in the early running, but here out entering the stretch, came again when straightened out, continued gamely and outlasted RED ROGUE. The latter moved into contention rapidly on the inside in the run down the backstretch, but was blocked rounding the turn, came to the outside, closed gamely and was wearing BOOMING GUNS down. WINGED VICTORY, a forward factor all the way, saved much ground and held on tenaciously in the final drive.

Inventories Being Reduced Says Col. Ayres

Most Hopeful Aspect of Present Situation, Says Cleveland Banker.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Jan. 14.—The fact that over-large inventories are being worked down constitutes the most hopeful aspect of the business situation early in the new year, Col. Leonard P. Ayres, vice president of the Cleveland Trust Co., said today in the bank's monthly business review.

"It is probably true," Col. Ayres said, "that the most serious obstacle against a prompt resumption of business recovery is the existence of over-large inventories of materials and finished goods in the warehouses of thousands of factories and dealers throughout the country.

"It seems probable that the primary cause of the building up of these too heavy inventories was the series of rapid advances in wage rates that took place in 1936 and the first half of 1937.

"These occurred throughout industry, and in order to make them, and still cover costs, producers lifted prices. As wages rose, and prices rose, and demand remained active, business men built up inventories and overdid it."

Col. Ayres declared the best condensed description of December business was found in a report of the National Association of Purchasing Agents, which said: "Business activity was slower, commodity prices were weaker, inventories were lower, collections were poorer, credit supplies were ample, employment was less, and buying policies aimed at covering current needs only."

He reported the physical volume of industrial production was nearly 34 per cent below the normal level in December, with most of the severe shrinkage taking place in the durable goods industries. "Unemployment is rapidly increasing, and many workers still on pay rolls are being employed only part time," he said.

Dominion of Canada Floats Loan in London

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 14 (AP).—Finance Minister Dunning today announced that a new £10,000,000 Dominion loan had been underwritten in London by a banking group headed by R. Mivison & Co. The purpose of the loan, the Minister said, was to refund a £7,000,658 maturity of Dominion of Canada 3 per cent stock and bonds due next July 1 and £3,000,000 in Dominion of Canada Canadian Pacific Railway landgrant 3½ per cent stock also due July 1.

The loan will take the form of a 3¼ per cent registered stock issue which will be offered to investors next Wednesday at 98½ to yield approximately 3.34 per cent.

Brokers' Loans Rise $8,000,000 for Week

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that last week's loans to brokers and dealers on securities held by reporting member banks in New York City totaled $682,000,000. The week ended Wednesday and the total represented an increase of $8,000,000 when compared with the previous week.

Loans for the corresponding week a year ago totaled $1,021,000,000.

Profit Taking, Export Lack, Lowers Wheat

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 14 (AP).—Virtual refusal of the Liverpool wheat market to follow yesterday's sharp upturns of prices this side of the Atlantic led to material setbacks here today.

Despite reports that dust storms were again in progress at various places, and were threatening damage to domestic winter wheat crops Southwest, sellers of wheat predominated in Chicago late as well as early. Leading specialists said it was still some weeks to the growing period for wheat in the regions menaced, and until that time the weather developments could not rule the market outright unless conditions became exceptionally adverse.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were around the bottommost level reached, ⅞-1⅛ cents under yesterday's finish; May, 97½@97⅞; July, 91½@91⅝. Corn, ⅛-1¼ down, May, 60⅛@60¼; July, 60¾@60⅞. Oats, ¼-⅜ off. Rye showing ⅝ to 1 cent drop, and provisions unchanged to 7 cents lower.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Irregularly Lower in Slow Trading; U. S. Bonds Firm; Franc Stronger.

New York, Jan. 14.—Stocks were mixed, United States bonds worked higher, French currency rallied a litle under American, British and French official support during the political crisis, and commodities were steady. Turnover in stocks again failed to reach a million shares. May wheat closed 1⅜ cents lower at 97⅛ cents a bushel.

With the announcement this morning that the Chautemps Cabinet had fallen and that the minister of finance, M. Bonnet, had departed with it, the tension, instead of increasing, was relieved somewhat. Last night Wall Street had been filled with rumors, including one that the Paris Bourse would be closed today. It turned out that the authorities in France did not regard the situation as bad enough for that, and only foreign exchange dealings on the Bourse and in the banks was halted, pending the formation of a new cabinet. On the Bourse and in the London market the tone of securities was fairly steady under the circumstances, and the hope that the new government might be a little less communistic in its leanings and a little more successful in dealing with labor helped to lighten the burden on our markets of the French crisis.

Franc Recovers.

French francs recovered moderately in trading here and in London, but the rally was not regarded as especially significant, inasmuch as the markets were relieved of French operations. What they are likely to be will be discovered on Monday, and if a flight of French capital continues another devaluation of the franc will be inevitable and possibly an embargo on gold shipments along with it. That would involve the breaking up of the tripartite agreement for currency stabilization. That agreement has been unsuccessful, as it was bound to be, in holding the franc, and no one knows how much it has cost the American stabilization fund. It was futile from the start to think that the French currency could be stabilized by treasury operations so long as the country's politics was frightening capital and so long as a profligate government was trying to outdeal the United States in vast social outlays and budget deficits.

On Right Side.

If Cabinet officers were really men of great influence in the Administration or acted as spokesmen for the President, a great deal of importance ought to be attached to the recent remarks of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau on taxation, the budget, the bonuses and business in general. Cabinet members and others close to the New Deal have so often been used merely as boys to fly kites and little balloons to discover public opinion, and their words have so frequently been contrary to the acts of the Chief Executive, that too much weight cannot be given the latest on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is, nevertheless, remarkable that the Secretary, in testimony before a Congressional committee yesterday, took the first stand for sound finance and common sense that has been taken since the New Deal began to gather headway.

Mr. Morgenthau made the bold and (for a member of the New Deal) highly unorthodox suggestion that balancing the budget would be easy, without additional taxation, and that no further taxes ought to be applied, for that would hold back business recovery. The balance, he asserted, could come from a comparatively small reduction in expenditure, this year and next year—less than a billion this year and only one and a half billions next year. Those are not tremendous figures in New Deal bookkeeping and it is encouraging to see that at least some one connected with the Administration realizes the gravity of the situation.

Inflation's Role.

If a balanced budget is not to be obtained, and if the balance is not to be secured through holding down expenditure rather than through lifting taxation, inflation is most assuredly the answer, and it won't be held back so very long, either. Mr. Morgenthau is convinced of that, just as he made clear his view that the public fear of inflation, seeing the trend of Government finance, had much to do with a too rapid advance in commodity prices and too much stocking of goods that resulted in congestion and a business slump. In passing another bouquet or two might as well be sent to Mr. Morgenthau's desk. He said he had never liked the silver purchasing idea, that he was opposed to paying the silver producers more than cost of production for their metal, that he was opposed to bonuses of any and all kinds.

If the President joins his Secretary of the Treasury in a return to the orthodox economic fold it won't be necessary to secure the advice of droves of businessmen and bankers now flocking to Washington. Fear is a great teacher and the break in stocks and business last autumn has conducted an attentive class. The crisis now menacing France is another object lesson to New Dealers everywhere and they are well aware of that fact.

Foreign Affairs.

The telephone and cable companies turned a pretty penny last night and this morning in tolls from brokers and bankers who reached their correspondents in London and Paris. The consensus of opinion as given to a number of brokers on this side was that a new government with leanings toward the right would be formed. In that case a sharp rally in francs was anticipated, but it was agreed that more than a change in government was needed to balance the French budget and prevent an outbreak of strikes. London, it was learned, was more anxious about the American political situation than about the French position. A little reassurance on this side would set in motion considerable buying from London, it was said.

Holding Companies.

What President Roosevelt wishes and what Congress may do are no longer one and indivisible, but the connection is near enough to give anxiety to those who do not agree with the President's "objectives," to use one of the most overworked words of the New Deal jargon. In his newspaper talk this morning the President, after reasserting his hostility to public utility holding companies, went out of his way to denounce the bank holding company and, finally, he came round to the admission that he was quite opposed to any and all holding companies. The President's exemption from the taboo of investment trusts which do not attempt to vote the stock of the companies represented in their portfolios probably will relieve that section of the market of nervousness. However, it would be mighty difficult to draw the line between a holding company and an investment trust in many cases and the prospect is for troubled skies for many companies that may be considered on the border line.

Anaconda Copper Wins "A" on Ticker

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—The coveted symbol "A" on the stock exchange ticker tape was shifted today to capital stock of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. from the common shares of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway. The Santa Fe stock was designated "SF," thus making it more readily recognized by those who call the road the "Santa Fe" instead of the "Atchison." Common stock of the Chrysler Corporation drew the symbol "C" heretofore assigned to Anaconda Copper. Chrysler has been "K" on the tape. The changes are effective January 24.

Washington Loan & Trust Nears Record

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Notwithstanding many adverse factors, earnings of Washington Loan & Trust Co. exceeded all previous years but one, stated President Harry G. Meem, of that institution, in making the latest annual report to its stockholders. In this statement, Mr. Meem announced the company now 48 years old, had been able to add $130,855.30 to its total capital funds.

Viewing general business conditions, the bank's chief executive said: "Certainly, 1937 could not be classified as another 1929. In both years, business reached its peak in midsummer with deflation of stock prices during the fall months. However, call money rates in 1929 rose above 20 per cent while in the past year it remained stationary at 1 per cent. Again, the national income last year reached an estimated total of $69,000,000,000 as compared with an income of $81,000,000,000 in 1929.

"It is evident," he reminded, "that when prices adjust themselves to a buying level, consumption of needful things will begin to catch up with the deferred demands of depression years and, as there is plenty of money and credit now available, it is not likely that past conditions of uncertainty will continue long: 1937 goes down into history as the worst labor strike period in our national life, but there is much evidence that the coming year will bring great improvement in relations between employers and employes.

"While there are domestic and political factors carrying implied threats to our future well-being, and while we must be deeply conscious of the foreign developments affecting the general outlook, it must be clear to all of us, from our own observation, that the forces of recovery are, nevertheless, latent. A wide variety of factors are available to give full play to the enterprise of our people. Among them is the conviction that there are no shortcuts to better times and that the observance of age-old economic laws must be the basis of sound progress. We still have problems to face in banking and business but, with the experience gained in the past few years, we will, I trust, steadily work our way toward better things."

A. I. B. Banquet.

Announcement was made yesterday by William H. Laughlin, Washington Loan & Trust Co., president of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, of the appointment of Robert H. Lacey, cashier of Columbia National Bank, as general chairman of the committee to arrange for the thirty-third annual banquet of the local chapter. The banquet will be held at the Willard Hotel, Saturday, February 19, and will be attended by many Government officials, out-of-town guests and several hundred directors, officers and employes of Washington banks.

The American Institute of Banking is composed of 225 chapters throughout the United States, with a membership of more than 58,000. It's graduation exercises last year were broadcast over the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting Co. During these exercises certificates of graduation were presented to 2,867 bankers, signifying their completion of the four-year course in banking and finance.

Mr. Lacey has been identified with the institute for 15 years and is a past president of Washington Chapter. He has served in numerous elective and appointive positions in the local organization; has been a member of several national committees and was a delegate to the national conventions held in Pittsburgh, Chicago and Washington. He is also active in the work of the District of Columbia Bankers Association.

Real Estate Course.

Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, announces a new course in "Real Estate and Home Loans," beginning January 25, and in which Harry J. Kane, jr., A. B., LL.B., will be the instructor. Mr. Kane is assistant secretary of Columbia Title Insurance Co., Real Estate Title Insurance Co. and a professor at Columbus University.

In announcing the course, the chapter's headquarters states, "This subject, a new study in the chapter, should be of unusual interest and value to banking students because of its practical aspect. Since banks are turning more and more to home mortgages as investments, and since housing is one of the subjects on which present economic thought is most concentrated, the student of banking can ill afford to be without a knowledge of real estate mortgage principles and how those principles are put to practical use within the bank."

"Home Mortgage Lending' is one of the first texts to deal exclusively with home mortgage investments. Among the subjects discussed are evolution of home mortgage lending practices and weaknesses in the real estate market prior to 1930; new developments designed to remedy those weaknesses; legal aspects of the mortgage; selection of mortgages, together with the nature, source, and measurement of risk; operation and organization of a mortgage loan department; use of current data as a guide to the administrative control of a mortgage business, and, finally, the regulatory and servicing activities of Federal and State governments."

Clearing Sales Lifts Retailing Over Year Ago

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 14.—Aided by January clearance sales, retail trade this week ran 2 to 5 per cent above last week and 2 to 6 per cent above a year ago, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

"Consumers' attention centered strongly on January 'white goods' promotions," the credit agency said. "With prices on some of these items the lowest in several years, many retailors reduced their inventories below the corresponding 1937 level.

"In many industrial districts retailers were heartened by the strength of purchasing power, in view of employment curtailment and payroll shrinkage."

Buying was spotty, sales spurting in some localities and sagging in others, but for the East retail trade averaged 2 to 7 per cent ahead of last year. New England sales were 2 to 6 per cent above the 1937 comparative, Middle West up 4 to 8 per cent, Northwest up 4 to 9 per cent; South up 3 to 10 per cent, Southwest up 4 to 8 per cent, and Pacific Coast unchanged to 2 per cent higher. Wholesale buying ran 3 to 10 per cent ahead of last year.

"Fresh confirmation of inventory reduction in many retail branches were numerous in most of the principal wholesale markets," the agency declared. "Replacement orders, almost without exception, specified immediate deliveries, and were extended to merchandise which was considered overstocked less than a month or two ago.

"Placement of advance commitments still was restricted, and much forward business was refused, due to wholesalers' fears of upward price adjustments."

Cotton Lower; March at 8.50

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Cotton sagged today under commission house liquidation and smaller demand. March opened at a high of 8.58 and closed at a low of 8.50, with final prices 7 to 8 points net lower.

The market opened unchanged to 4 points lower in sympathy with disappointing Liverpool cables and under hedge selling and liquidation. January trading expired at noon at a price of 8.46, or 8 points net lower. A steady flow of small selling orders through commission houses was considered largely responsible for the downward trend.

Fort Myer Troops Give Riding Drill

By Gene Reed.

The first of the regular Friday afternoon exhibition drills was held at Fort Myer yesterday. Guest of honor at this opening ride was Maj. Gen. Albert J. Bowley, commanding general of the Third Corps Area.

Gen. Bowley, accompanied by Col. Jonathan M. Wainwright, commanding officer at Fort Myer, was escorted to his box by a mounted escort of Tenth Cavalrymen and a group of buglers, immediately after which the drill opened with a parade of the Second Squadron of the Third Cavalry, led by Maj. A. W. Roffe.

The squadron, consisting of about 150 men and horses, executed complex maneuvers at the trot and gallop, coming into formation at the conclusion to offer a salute to the commanding officer and guest of honor.

Black Horse Battery Drills.

Following this the famed black horse battery of Field Artillery put on its breakneck drill. This is the crack outfit which had such a success at the National Horse Show in New York this fall. A machine gun troop then demonstrated the mobility of horse cavalry and the extreme rapidity with which a machine gun can be got off a horse and into action.

The bridleless ride, put on by Headquarters Troop, Third Cavalry, was one of the most thrilling of the exhibitions and of particular interest to the experienced horseman, as the maneuvers of these 24 horses are all conducted without bridles, and the only aids used are the legs and weight of the rider.

Pretties ride of all was the musical drill of E Troop, presented this year with several innovations and done with unbelievable delicacy and precision. The tandem horses at Fort Myer are supposedly the only group of horses so trained in the world. They take numerous jumps in tandem formation of two. Battery C's firing demonstration was most warlike and realistic.

A backdrop representing an enemy village was effectively devastated by fire from four cannon despite spirited resistance from machine guns and a tank.

Stage Gymnastic Ride.

Machine Gun Troop's second demonstration of the afternoon, the gymnastic ride, probably requires more skill and training of the men than any of the lot. Big thrill of this event is the horse which jumps, first, a table at which men are seated, second, a prone horse on which a man is lying, and, thirdly, a living barrier of men. This presentation is thoroughly professional from the fast start through the jumping exit of an eight-man pyramid standing on three horses.

A group of noncommissioned officers successfully negotiated a course of jumps while removing coats, stirrups and saddles and then replacing the saddles, all of this done in midair, over obstacles.

Final drill of the afternoon was the F Troop rodeo ride, most popular of all with the audience, with its exciting fire jump finish. The Sixteenth Field Artillery conducted the imposing closing ceremonies.

These rides will be held every Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in the Fort Myer riding hall until April. The public is welcome and there is no admission charge.

Londos to Wrestle Here Thursday

JIM LONDOS.

Jim Londos On Mat Here

After studying the list of capable opponents, Promoter Turner hauled off and selected Dr. John (Dropkick) Murphy, the Boston physician, for a one-fall-to-a-finish match.

Londos and Murphy will be meeting for the first time, and, in view of the doctor's victory last Thursday night over Paddy Mack, the Greek will have no easy evening.

In his first appearance in Washington in three years, Londos recently threw Billy Bartush, the Lithuanian, before a record crowd at the arena. That was last month. Since then, Jim has taken on all comers in his Eastern invasion and gradually is working his campaign up to a point where he hopes to make all holder of titles prove their claims in matches against him.

In Murphy, the Greek will be meeting a clever wrestler. Murphy, a graduate of the Middlesex School of Surgery and Medicine in Boston, stole the show at the arena Thursday night. For fully 2 minutes after he left the ring, fans were cheering him.

All-America Cagers Here

Several former college stars who played against Georgetown and George Washington will play for the Pittsburgh Pirates against the Heurich Brewers' professional basketball team Sunday afternoon at the Heurich gym.

The players are Don Smith, former all-American forward from University of Pittsburgh; Tim Lawry and Billy Jesko, former Pitt captains; Teddy Riggs, erstwhile Carnegie Tech captain, and Hymie Ginsberg, late of Geneva College.

Herb Bonn, all-American last year at Duquesne; Walt Miller, Ed Kweller and Dudey Moore, former Duquesne stars, will play with the Pirates, a National Pro League contender.

Lash Runs Today.

New York, Jan. 14.—Don Lash, sandy-haired Indiana iron man, will make his first official record attempt of the indoor track season tomorrow night at the 69th Regiment A. A. meet in the regimental armory.

Ray Ingram Meets Borne

Ray Ingram, Washington featherweight who recently met Petey Sarron, former titleholder, in Richmond, has been added to Monday night's boxing card at Turner's Arena, featuring Lou Gevinson and Armada Sicilia.

Ingram's opponent will be Sailor Borne, New York. Ingram and Borne will scrap in a special six-round bout.

Al Mancine, Providence's clever young fighter, who has won himself a following here by virtue of victories over Red Transparetti and Tiny Ricco, meets Pete Powell, Newport News bantamweight, in a six-round semiwindup.

In order to put Ingram and Borne on the card, Matchmaker Ahearn was forced to eliminate the four-round preliminary involving Mike O'Leary and Jack Quinn. But the other four-rounders—Tommy Hoover vs. Al Jameson in a return go, and Red Tucker vs. Mike Morton, stand up.

Sicilia, fresh from a victory over Cristobal Jaramillo, Puerto Rican fighter, is due in town today. Gevinson, anxious to regain some of the prestige he lost by his defeat at the hands of Tony Dupre, will wind up his training at the National Guard Armory.

Ingram, though bounced around of late, is seeking a comeback. He has hopes of getting that bout with Gevinson—a match that was hot early last summer. If Ingram gets past Borne, who is no soft touch—as attested by the Sailor's draw with Johnny Dean and his bout with Irish Eddie Dunne—he may be pitted against either Gevinson or Sicilia, or maybe Al Reid.

Shippensburg Tops Wilson Five, 41-38

Although the game was hotly contested in every quarter, the visitors managed to remain in front all the way. Wilson's most dangerous threat to the lead was made in the third quarter, when Flash Gordon scored to pull his team up to 37-38.

Gallaudet's Quint Loses

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 14.—In a basketball game in which an unusual exhibition of uncertainty prevailed, the Towson Teacher College basketeers chalked up their fifth victory of the season today, conquering a veteran Gallaudet College quintet, 45 to 37, at the Teachers' court.

The teachers alternated in periods of brilliant and steady playing and then lapsed into periods of dull and throw-away type of playing. Austerlitz, Towson forward, was the first to break the ice, and after 12 minutes of play, the host held an 18-to-1 advantage.

The visitors, however, took advantage of Towson's wildness for the remainder of the half to pile up 13 points. While holding the Teachers to 8.

Wayne Sabin Net Winner

Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 14 (U.P.).—Wayne Sabin, the Los Angeles tennis stylist, who is America's sixth-ranking player, lobbed and volleyed his way to a four-set triumph over Frank Kovacs, of Oakland, Calif., today to gain the finals of the Nautilus Club Championships.

Sabin's soft game and change of pace kept the 18-year-old Oakland youth away from the net and won for him 6—3, 3—6, 6—0, 6—4.

Kovacs, who had trouble with his footing on the slippery surface of the Nautilus Courts, forced himself into costly errors by attempting to storm the net for kills. The only time his tactics were effective was in the second set which he won, 6—3.

Sabin will meet the winner of tomorrow's semi-final between Bobby Riggs, of Los Angeles, and Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., for the title Sunday.

Bessone Is Signed.

Detroit, Jan. 14 (AP).—Peter Bessone, 195-pound defenseman for Pontiac, of the Michigan-Ontario Amateur League, was signed to a two-year contract today by the Detroit Red Wings, of the National Hockey League, and was ordered to report at Montreal immediately for Saturday's game with the Maroons.

Peter De Vries Beats Summers in Tourney

Peter DeVries, wielding a mean little paddle that resembled the one your mother used to use with efficiency, made a little white ball dance with glee and do all kinds of fancy tricks to register an upset over Lem Summers, a seeded player, 21—15, 22—24, 21—14, in the first round of the annual District Table Tennis Association's tournament at Heurich Gymnasium last night.

DeVries, by his excellent showing, will be favored to cop the men's class A division. The quarter-finals will start this afternoon at 2 o'clock and tonight will find the semifinalists and finalists of all classes competing for the championships.

Jack Skinner, men's class B division, seems to be headed for the championship by eliminating three opponents in great style, although a little lad by the name of Williams really knew how to apply that small piece of wood to the ball.

All winners in the Men's Class A division will have a chance to show their mettle when they stack up against such seeded players as Elias Schuman, Hal Crowell, Eddie Yap, Willard King, Ed Gee and Lamar Harper, who drew a bye in the first round play. These men will tee off this afternoon and will probably display some fancy ball bouncing.

Florence Farnwell was the cream of the crop in the Woman's Class A division and bids fair to snare the crown. She downed Mae Yap, a ping-ponger from way back, in three straight tilts.

In the Woman's Class B division, Virginia Mapes made the best showing by winning over Margaret Graham and Vida Dent, but this class has several good players who have a chance for top honors.

Bob Burns Says—

I've found that the actors that've stayed on top the longest out here in Hollywood are those who had the courage to be themselves.

I'll never forget an editorial I read in a little Kansas paper, one time, written by the editor himself.

It said "I have been criticized quite a little by some of the town smart alecks for usin' poor grammar. Now I've got three good reasons for this. In the first place—I don't know no better; second, half of you wouldn't understand it if I did use it; third, if I did speak and write correctly, I might be managin' some big New York paper at a large salary, and you farmers would lose the best editor in Graham County."

Prince Georges Asks U.S. Grant For Large Park

Request for $300,000 Is Given Backing of Planning Body at Once.

Nearly six years behind its neighbor, Montgomery County, in taking advantage of financial benefits of the Capper-Cramton act, Prince Georges County yesterday applied for a loan and grant of $300,000 to enlarge its park lands. The request was immediately indorsed by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Secretary Thomas S. Settle, to whom the application was addressed, announced that the planning body will send a supplemental estimate to the Budget Bureau in order to make the funds available as soon as possible. Of the amount, $100,000 would be an outright grant and the remainder a loan, without interest, to be repaid within eight years.

George N. Palmer, chairman of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, informed Settle that "while the county commissioners of Prince Georges have not passed a formal resolution joining in this request, we are assured that such a resolution will be passed in due course."

It is planned to use the funds for acquisition of park lands in the valleys of the Eastern, Northwest and Paint branches of the Anacostia River. The first-named tract lies between the District line and Bladensburg, the second between Rhode Island avenue and the Montgomery line and the third extends north of Jefferson avenue.

To finance the project, a special 2-cent tax levy will be requested of the Prince Georges Commissioners, said T. Howard Duckett, spokesman for that county's delegation to the Maryland-National Capital planning body.

"The tax for the first year will be consumed in the administrative expenses in outlining, appraising, surveying and purchasing the park lands, as none of these expenses can be deducted from the Capper-Cramton money," he said.

"After the first year the proceeds of the tax will be used for the purpose of improving, beautifying and making useful the park lands so acquired."

Bond Issue Proposed.

It is proposed to repay the $200,000 debt to the Federal Government by floating a bond issue, which would be retired "by a modest tax on a then largely increased assessable basis," Duckett said.

Both Duckett and Palmer expressed their belief that county sentiment is now ripe for the expansion program. Since April, 1932, Montgomery County has received $1,000,000 in Capper-Cramton funds on the same basis, one-third grant and two-thirds loan.

William A. Delano, architect member of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and chairman of a special committee named last month to study the local parking problem, submitted a preliminary report yesterday, but its findings were not made public.

Progress studies on development of Theodore Roosevelt Island, in the Potomac River between Arlington and Key bridges, were approved. They were prepared by Frederick Law Olmsted, Brookline, Mass., landscape architect who was retained for the project by the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

William A. Albaugh presents Trudi Schoop and her dancing comedians at the National Theater. Program: "All for Love," in seven tragi-comic episodes with choreography by Trudi Schoop and music by Lothar Perl.

If one were to draw a moral, as the old-fashioned phrase runs, from the entertainment proffered yesterday by Trudi Schoop and her effervescent company, it would be that a sense of humor is the best solvent of melancholy. It would seem as though the diminutive Swiss mime had devised her episodic ballet, which has no other connective thread than the musical theme symbolizing the adage that love makes the world go 'round, with the sole purpose of demonstrating that laughter can mitigate any shock.

Death strikes twice, hunger drives to theft, and hearts are broken in some of the scenes of Miss Schoop's compressed human comedy, yet these grave matters are forgotten as quickly as the passing of a cloud-shadow. There is no time for grieving while the spirit of life beckons to fresh adventure, and tears are idle while there is so much at which to smile. So on with the dance, though the gayety be at first a bit wistful.

This well-trained troupe, equally skilled in pantomime and in dance steps of the modern kind, has an irresistible youthfulness and zest. Their spontaneity gives to their routines the semblance of improvisations, and their sportive tricks seem played on the spur of the moment. Miss Schoop, whose facial muscles have the suppleness of the native comedian, has apt pupils among her collaborators, and the tempo of their mimiery is unflagging.

Lothar Perl's music, played by himself and Max Fickel on two pianos, has fresh and engaging melodic lines and a Viennese lilt.

Funeral services for Mrs. Annie M. Eopolucci, 70, mother of the first American sailor killed in the World War, will be held Monday morning at 9 o'clock in St. Peter's Catholic Church, following brief services at her residence, 649 I street southeast. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Mrs. Eopolucci died in Providence Hospital Thursday night after a brief illness. Her first son, John Eopolucci, was killed April 1, 1917, five days before open hostilities between the United States and Germany were declared, when the armed steamer Aztec was torpedoed and sunk about 9 miles from Brest, France. He was 22 at the time, and had served for 10 years in the Navy.

In September, 1918, Mrs. Eopolucci lost another son when William, then 23, was killed in action with the 312th Machine Gun Battalion serving in France.

John Eopolucci was one of 13 naval guards aboard the Aztec. The life boat in which he embarked with others after the explosion was smashed by the high seas.

President Hoover, on March 3, 1933, signed a bill awarding Mrs. Eopolucci $5,000 for the death of her son, the measure calling for payments of $20 monthly. She received $10,000 insurance from the Government on a policy taken out by her second son.

At the time Mrs. Eopolucci's first son was killed the news of his death brought from Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels the statement:

A third son, Samuel, who served in the Navy during the war, returned home safe after the Armistice.

Mrs. Eopolucci was the widow of Samueli Eopolucci, a former Marine Band musician. Besides her third son, Samuel, she is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Florence Johnston, Mrs. Mary Van Horn and Mrs. Marion Mansfield, and a brother, Robert S. Clifford, all of Washington.

General Motors Aid Denounces Economic Rule

Americans Won't Concede Government Control, Engineers Told.

Americans "are not ready yet to concede that we must endure in our Government a permanently high degree of economic control," James D. Mooney, vice president of General Motors, told a meeting of engineers last night. The engineers, representing 28 professional societies, met at an "all engineers dinner," sponsored by the American Engineering Council.

The subject of Mooney's talk was "Some Observations on Economics, Politics and Government." He said in an ideal economic state "the consumer's interests would be placed above all else" and declared industry's welfare depends upon welfare of the consumer.

Mooney said Americans "deserve a scheme of Government" which will preserve "traditional individual liberty." And, he added, "we do not want the Government or anybody else continually 'snapping us into it'."

Among nations throughout the world which have developed central authorities strong enough to "impose in varying degrees remarkable and increasing governmental control over industry, agriculture and the general economic life of their citizens," Mooney named Germany, Italy, Russia, England and the United States. He said the trend of governments today and "the trend which constitutes a danger for us in America," is that toward "too high a degree of integration; too great a control over every area of the lives of men."

The best defense against this "integration," he said, is the traditional two-party system, to which he gave credit for maintaining a balance in American democracy. He cited France as an example of a democracy weakened by too many parties, whereas America has "had strong government" but "escaped extreme tyranny."
